Convict by flight, and rebel to all law,
Conviction to the serpent none belongs.
Milton's Paradise Lost.

2. The act of convincing; confutation; the act of forcing others, by argument, to allow a position.

When therefore the apostle requireth ability to convict heretics, can we think he judgeth it a thing unlawful, and not rather needful, to use the principal instrument of their conviction, the light of reason? Hooker.

The manner of his conviction was designed, not as a peculiar privilege to him, but as a standing miracle, a lasting argument for the conviction of others, to the very end of the world. Atterbury.

3. State of being convinced.

Their wisdom is only of this world, to put false colours upon things, to call good evil, and evil good, against the conviction of their own consciences. Swift.

CONVI'CTIVE. adj. [from convict.] Having the power of convincing.

To CONVI'NCE. v. a. [convinco, Lat.]

1. To force any one to acknowledge a contested position.

That which I have all this while been endeavouring to convince men of, and to persuade them to, is no other but what God himself doth particularly recommend to us, as proper for human consideration. Tillotson.

But, having shifted ev'ry form to 'scape,
Convinc'd of conquest, he resum'd his shape.
Dryden's Virgil.

History is all the light we have in many cases; and we receive from it a great part of the useful truths we have, with a convincing evidence. Locke.

2. To convict; to prove guilty of.

To convince all that are ungodly among them, of all their ungodly deeds. Jude, 15.

The discovery of a truth, formerly unknown, doth rather convince man of ignorance, than nature of errour. Raleigh.

O seek not to convince me of a crime,
Which I can ne'er repent, nor can you pardon.
Dryden.

3. To envince; to prove; to manifest; to vindicate. Not in use.

Your Italy contains none so accomplished a courtier, to convince the honour of my mistress.
Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

This letter, instead of a confutation, only urgeth me to prove divers passages of my sermon, which M. Cheynel's part was to convince. Dr. Maine.

4. To overpower; to surmount. This sense is now obsolete.

There are a crew of wretched souls
That fly heaven, their merits convince
The great eye of art. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Knaves be such abroad,
Who having, by their own importunate suit,
Or voluntary dotage of some mistress,
Convinced or supplied them, they cannot choose
But they must blab. Shakespeare's Othello.

When Duncan is asleep, his two chamberlains
Will I with wine and wassel so convince,
That memory, the warder of the brain,
Shall be a fume. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

CONVI'NCEMENT. n. s. [from convince.] Conviction.

If that be not convincement enough, let him weigh the other two. Duke of Pl.

CONVI'NCIBLE. adj. [from convince.]

COO'RDINATE. adj. [con and ordinatus, Latin.] Holding the ſame rank; not being ſubordinate. Thus ſhell-fiſh may be divided into two coordinate kinds, cruſtaceous and teſtaceous; each of which is again divided into many ſpecies, ſubordinate to the kind, but coordinate to each other.

The word Analyſis ſignifies the general and particular heads of any ſcience, with their mutual connexion, both coordinate and ſubordinate, drawn out into one or more tables. Watts.

COO'RDINATELY. adv. [from coordinate.] In the ſame rank; in the ſame relation: without ſubordination.

COO'RDINATENESS n. ſ. [from coordinate.] The ſtate of being coordinate.

COO'RDINATION. n. ſ. [from coordinate.] The ſtate of holding the ſame rank; of ſtanding in the ſame relation to ſomething higher; collateralneſs.

In this high court of parliament there is a true coordination of power, a wholeſome mixture between monarchy, optimacy, and democracy. Howel's Pre-eminence of Parliament.

When theſe petty intrigues of a play are ſo well ordered, that they have no coherence with the other, I muſt grant that Lyſidius has reaſon to tax that want of due connexion; for coordination in a play is as dangerous and unnatural as in a ſtate. Dryden on Dramatic Poeſy.

COOT. n. ſ. [meer-koet, Dut. corée, Fr.] A ſmall black water-fowl, ſeen often in fens and marſhes.

A lake, the haunt
Of coots, and of the fiſhing cormorant. Dryden's Fables.

COP. n. ſ. [kop, Dut. cop, Sax.] The head; the top of any thing; any thing riſing to a head: as, a cop, vulgarly cock, of hay; a cob-caſtle, properly cop-caſtle, a ſmall caſtle or houſe on a hill; a cob of cherry-ſtones, for cop, a pile of ſtones one laid upon another; a tuft on the head of birds.

In deſcent to all the daughters in coparcenary, for want of ſons, the chief houſe is allotted to the eldeſt daughter. Hale's Hiſtory of Common Law.

COPA'R-

COPARCENER. n. ſ. [from con and particeps, Lat.]

Coparceners are otherwiſe called parceners; and, in common law, are ſuch as have equal portion in the inheritance of the anceſtor. Cowell.

This great lordſhip was broken and divided, and partition made between the five daughters: in every of theſe portions, the coparceners ſeverally exerciſed the ſame juriſdiction royal, which the earl marſhal and his ſons had uſed in the whole province. Davies on Ireland.

COPA'RCENY. n. ſ. An equal ſhare of coparceners. Phillips's World of Words.

COPA'RTNER. n. ſ. [co and partner.] One that has a ſhare in ſome common ſtock or affair; one equally concerned; a ſharer; a partaker; a partner. Milton has uſed it both with of and in.

Our faithful friends,
Th' aſſociates and copartners of our loſs.
Milton's Paradiſe Loſt.

Shall I to him make known
As yet my change, and give him to partake
Full happineſs with me? Or rather not;
But keep the odds of knowledge in my power,
Without copartner? Milton's Paradiſe Loſt.

Rather by them
I gain'd what I have gain'd, and with them dwell
Copartners in theſe regions of the world.
Milton's Paradiſe Regained.

COPA'RTNERSHIP. n. ſ. [from copartner.] The ſtate of bearing an equal part, or poſſeſſing an equal ſhare.

In-eate the father-in-law dioneers, the daughters were equally ſucceeded to their father as in copartnerſhip. Howel.

CO'PAIAN. adj. [from cop.] High raiſed; pointed. Hanmer.

Oh, monſieur le Fer, a ſilk doublet, a velvet hoſe, a ſcarlet cloak, and a copatain hat.
Shakſpeare's Taming of the Shrew.

COPAYVA. n. ſ. [It is ſometimes written capivi, copevi, copeiva, copaiva, cupayva, cupayba.] A gum which diſtils from a tree in Braſil. It is much uſed in diſorders of the urinary paſſages.

COPE. n. ſ. [See COAT.]

1. Any thing with which the head is covered.
2. A ſacerdotal cloak, or veſtment worn in ſacred miniſtration.
3. Any thing which is ſpread over the head; as the concave of the ſkies; any archwork over a door.

All theſe things that are contained
Within this goodly cope, both moſt and leaſt,
Their being have, and daily are increaſt. Spenſer.

Over head the diſmal hiſs
Of fiery darts in flaming vollies flew,
And flying vaulted either hoſt with fire;
So, under fiery cope, togetherruſh'd
Both battles main. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt.

The ſcholar believes there is no man under the cope of heaven, who is ſo knowing as his maſter. Dryden.

To COPE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To cover, as with a cope.

A very large bridge, that is all made of wood, and coped over head. Addiſon on Italy.

2. To contend with; to oppoſe.

Know my name is loſt,
By treaſon's tooth bare gnawn, and canker-bit;
Yet am I noble as the adverſary
I come to cope. Shakeſpeare's King Lear.

3. To reward; to give in return.

I and my friend
Have, by your wiſdom, been this day acquitted
Of grievous penalties; in lieu whereof,
Three thouſand ducats, due unto the Jew,
We freely cope your courteous pains withal. Shak.

To COPE. v. n.

1. To contend; to ſtruggle; to ſtrive. It has with before the thing or perſon oppoſed. [In this ſenſe it is a word of doubtful etymology. The conjecture of Junius derives it from koopen, to buy, or ſome other word of the ſame import; ſo that to cope with ſignifies to interchange blows, or any thing elſe, with another.]

Let our trains
March by us, that we may peruſe the men
We ſhould have cop'd withal. Shak. Henry IV.

It is likely thou wilt undertake
A thing, like death, to chide away this ſhame,
That copes with death itſelf, to 'ſcape from it.
Shakeſpeare.

But Eve was Eve;
This far his over-match, who, ſelf-deceiv'd
And raſh, before-hand had no better weigh'd
The ſtrength he was to cope with, or his own.
Milton.

They perfectly underſtood both the hates and the enmity they were to cope withal. L'Eſtrange.

On every plain,
Hoſt cop'd with hoſt, dire was the din of war.
Pope.

The generals have not been able to cope with the troop of Athens, which I have conducted.
Addiſon's Whig Examiner.

If the mind apply itſelf firſt to eaſier ſubjects, and things near a kin to what is already known; and then advance to the more remote and knotty parts of knowledge by ſlow degrees, it will be able, in this manner, to cope with great difficulties, and prevail over them with amazing and happy ſucceſs. Watts on the Mind.

2. To encounter; to interchange kindneſs or ſentiments.

Thou freſh piece
Of excellent witchcraft, who of force muſt know
The royal fool thou cop'ſt with. Shak. Winter's Tale.

Thou art e'en as juſt a man,
As e'er my converſation coped withal.
Shakeſpeare's Hamlet.

To COPE. v. a. To embrace. Not in uſe.

I will make him tell the tale anew;
Where, how, how oft, how long ago, and when,
He hath, and is again to cope your wife.
Shakeſpeare's Othello.

CO'PESMATE. n. ſ. [perhaps for cuſtſmate, a companion in drinking, or one that dwells under the ſame cope, for houſe.] Companion; friend. An old word.

Never ſtand in place, nor ſpeak to wight,
Till that the fox his copeſmate he had found.
Hubberd's Tale.

CO'PIER. n. ſ. [from copy.]

1. One that copies; a tranſcriber.

A comma is in no danger of having its characters altered by copiers and tranſcribers. Addiſon's Guardian.

2. One that imitates; a plagiary; an imitator.

Without invention a painter is but a copier, and a poet but a plagiary of others. Dryden's Dedication to Juvenal.

Let the faint copiers, in cold Tiber's mire,
Not mean the dark, each breathing buſt explore;
Like ſtreſſes line with painful patience trace,
This Roman grandeur, that Athenian grace. Id.

CO'PING. n. ſ. [from cope.] The upper tire of maſonry which covers the wall.

All theſe were of coſtly ſtones, even from the foundation unto the coping. 1 Kings, vii. 9.

The coping, the modillion, or dentils, make a noble ſhew by their graceful projection.
Addiſon's Freeholder.

CO'PIOUS. adj. [copia, Latin.]

1. Plentiful; abundant; exuberant; in great quantities.

Roſe, as in dance, the ſtately trees, and ſpread
Their branches hung with copious fruit. Milton.

Full meaſure only bounds
Exceſs, before the all-bounteous king, who ſhow'r'd
With copious hand, rejoicing in their joy. Milton.

This alkaline acrimony indicates the copious uſe of vinegar and acid fruits. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

The tender heart is peace,
And kindly pours its copious treaſures forth
In various converſe. Thomſon's Spring.

2. Abounding in words or images; not barren; not confined; not conciſe.

Hail, Son of God, Saviour of men! thy name
Shall be the copious matter of my ſong
Henceforth, and never ſhall my harp thy praiſe
Forget, nor from thy Father's praiſe diſjoin.
Milton.

CO'PIOUSLY. adv. [from copious.]

1. Plentifully; abundantly; in great quantities.
2. At large; without brevity or conciſeneſs; diffuſely.

Theſe ſeveral remains have been ſo copiouſly deſcribed by abundance of travellers, and other writers, that it is very difficult to make any new diſcoveries on ſo beaten a ſubject. Addiſon.

CO'PIOUSNESS. n. ſ. [from copious.]

1. Plenty; abundance; great quantity; exuberance.
2. Diffuſion; exuberance of ſtyle.

The Roman orator endeavoured to imitate the copiouſneſs of Homer, and the Latin poet made it his buſineſs to reach the conciſeneſs of Demoſthenes. Dryden.

CO'PIST. n. ſ. [from copy.] A copier; a tranſcriber; an imitator.

CO'PLAND. n. ſ. A piece of ground which the land terminates with an acute angle. Dict.

CO'PPED. adj. [from cop.] Riſing to a top or head.

It was broad in its baſis, and roſe copped like a ſugar-loaf. Wiſeman's Surgery.

A petiolated eſchinus being copped and ſomewhat conic. Woodward.

CO'PPEL. n. ſ. [This word is variouſly ſpelt; as copel, cupel, cuple, and cupple; but I cannot find its etymology.] An inſtrument uſed in chymiſtry, in the form of a diſh, made of aſhes, well waſhed, to cleanſe them from all their ſalt; or of bones thoroughly calcined. Its uſe is to try and purify gold and ſilver, which is done by mingling lead with the metal, and expoſing it in the coppel to a violent fire a long while. The impurities of the metal will then be carried off in droſs, which is called the litharge of gold and ſilver. The refiners call the coppel a teſt. Harris.

CO'PPER. n. ſ. [koper, Dutch; cuprum, Latin.] One of the ſix primitive metals.

Copper is the moſt ductile and malleable metal, after gold and ſilver. Of a mixture of copper and lapis calaminaris is formed braſs; a compoſition of copper and tin makes bell-metal; and copper and braſs, melted in equal quantities, produces what the French call bronze, uſed for figures and ſtatues. Chambers.

Copper is heavier than iron or tin; but lighter than ſilver, lead, and gold. Hill on Foſſils.

Two veſſels of fine copper, precious as gold.
Ezra, viii. 27.

CO'PPER. n. ſ. A veſſel made of copper: commonly uſed for a boiler larger than a moveable pot.

They boiled it in a copper to the half; then they poured it into earthen veſſels. Bacon's Nat. Hiſt.

COPPER-NOSE. n. ſ. [copper and noſe.] A red noſe.

He having colour enough, and the other higher, is too flaming a praiſe for a good complexion: I had as lieve Helen's golden tongue had commended Troilus for a copper-noſe. Shakeſpeare.

Gutta rolacea ariſeth in little hard tubercles, aſſaulting the face all over with great itching, which, being ſcratched, looks red, and riſes in great welks, reddening the viſage fiery; and makes copper-noſes, as we generally expreſs them. Wiſeman.

COPPER-PLATE. n. ſ. A plate on which pictures are engraven for the neater impreſſion, diſtinguiſhed from a wooden cut.

COPPER-WORK. n. ſ. [copper and work.] A place where copper is worked or manufactured.

COPPERAS. n. ſ. [kopperooſe, Dut. couperoſe, Fr. ſuppoſed to be found in copper mines only.] A name given to three ſorts of vitriol; the green, the bluiſh green, and the white, which are produced in the mines of Germany, Hungary, and other countries. But what is commonly ſold here for copperas, is an artificial vitriol, made of a kind of ſtones found on the ſea-ſhore in Eſſex, Hampſhire, and ſo weſtward, ordinarily called gold ſtones from their colour. They abound with iron, and are expoſed to the weather in beds above ground, and receive the rains and dews, which in time breaks and diſſolves the ſtones: the liquor that runs off is pumped into boilers, in which is firſt put old iron, which, in boiling, diſſolves. This factitious copperas, in many reſpects, agrees with the native green vitriol. Chambers. Hill.

It may be queſtioned, whether, in this operation, the iron or copperas be tranſmuted, from the cognation of copperas with copper, and the iron remaining after converſion. Brown.

COPPERSMITH. n. ſ. [copper and ſmith.] One that manufactures copper.

Salmoneus, as the Grecian tale is,
Was a mad copperſmith of Elis;
Up at his forge by morning peep. Swift

COPPERWORM. n. ſ. [teredo, Latin.]
A little worm in ſhips.
A worm that fretteth garments.
A worm breeding in one's hand. Ainſworth.

COPPERY. adj. [from copper.] Containing copper; made of copper.

Some ſprings of Hungary, highly impregnated with vitriolick ſalts, diſſolve the body of iron put into the ſpring, and depoſite, in lieu of the irony particles carried off, coppery particles brought with the water out of the neighbouring copper-mines. Woodward on Foſſils.

COPPICE. n. ſ. [coupeaux, Fr. from couper, to cut or lop. It is often written copſe.] Low woods cut at ſtated times for fuel; a place over-run with bruſh-wood.

A land, each ſide whereof was bounded both with high timber trees, and copſes of far more humble growth. Sidney.

Upon the edge of yonder coppice,
A ſtand, where you may have the faireſt ſhoot. Shakeſpeare.

In copſe-woods, if you leave ſtaddles too thick, they run to bullies and briars, and have little clean underwood. Bacon

The willows, and the hazel copſes green,
Shall now no more be ſeen
Fanning their joyous leaves to their ſoft lays. Milton.

Raiſe trees in your ſeminaries and nurſeries, and you may tranſplant them for coppice ground, walks, or hedges. Mortimer's Huſbandry.

The rate of coppice lands will fall upon the diſcovery of coal-mines. Locke.

COPPLE-DUST. n. ſ. [probably for coppel, or cupel duſt.] Powder uſed in purifying metals, or the groſs parts ſeparated by the cupel.

It may be alſo tried by incorporating powder of ſteel, or copple-duſt, by pouncing into the quick-ſilver. Bacon.

COPPLE-STONES are lumps and fragments of ſtone or marble, broke from the adjacent cliffs, rounded by being bowled and tumbled to and again by the action of the water. Woodward.

COPPLED. adj. [from cop.] Riſing in a conick form; riſing to a point.

There is ſome difference in this ſhape, ſome being flatter on the top, others more coppled. Woodward on Foſſils.

COPSE. n. ſ. [abbreviated from coppice.] Short wood cut at a certain growth for fuel; a place overgrown with ſhort wood.

The eaſt quarters of the ſhire are not deſtitute of copſe woods. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

Oaks and brambles, if the copſe be burn'd,
Confounded lie, to the ſame aſhes turn'd. Waller.

But in what quarter of the copſe it lay,
His eye by certain level could ſurvey.
Dryden's Fables.

To COPSE. v. a. [from the noun.] To preſerve underwoods.

The neglect of copſing wood cut down, hath been of very evil conſequence. Swift's Addreſs to Parliament.

COPULA. n. [Latin.] The word which unites the ſubject and predicate of a propoſition; as, books are dear.

The copula is the form of a propoſition; it repreſents the act of the mind, affirming or denying. Watts's Logick.

To COPULATE. v. a. [copulo, Latin.] To unite; to conjoin; to link together.

If the force of cuſtom, ſimple and ſeparate, be great, the force of cuſtom copulate, and conjoined, and collegiate, is far greater. Bacon.

To COPULATE. v. n. To come together as different ſexes.

Not only the perſons ſo copulating are infected, but alſo their children. Wiſeman's Surgery.

COPULATION. n. ſ. [from copulate.] The congreſs or embrace of the two ſexes.

Sundry kinds, even of conjugal copulation, are prohibited as unhoneſt. Hooker.

COPULATIVE. adj. [copulativus, Latin.] A term of grammar.

Copulative propoſitions are thoſe which have more ſubjects or predicates connected by affirmative or negative conjunctions: as, riches and honours are temptations to pride; Cæſar conquered the Gauls and the Britons; neither gold nor jewels will purchaſe immortality. Watts's Logick.

COPY. n. ſ. [copie, Fr. copia, low Latin; quod cuipiam facta eſt copia exſcribendi. Junius inclines, after his manner, to derive it from κόπος, labour; becauſe, ſays he, to copy another's writing is very painful and laborious.]

1. A tranſcript from the archetype or original.

If virtue's ſelf were loſt, we might
From your fair mind new copies write. Waller.

I have not the vanity to think my copy equal to the original. Dunham.

He ſtept forth, not only the copy of God's hands, but alſo the copy of his perfections, a kind of image or repreſentation of the Deity in ſmall. South's Sermons.

The Romans having ſent to Athens, and the Greek cities of Italy, for copies of the beſt laws, choſe ten legiſlators to put them into form. Swift.

2. An individual book; one of many books: as, a good, or fair copy.

The very having of the books of God was a matter of no ſmall charge, as they could not be had otherwiſe than in written copies. Hooker.

3. The autograph; the original; the archetype; that from which any thing is copied.

It was the copy of our conference;
In bed he ſlept not, for my urging it;
At board he fed not, for my urging it.
Shakeſpeare's Comedy of Errours.

Let him firſt learn to write, after a copy, all the letters in the vulgar alphabet. Holder's Elements of Speech.

The firſt of them I have forgotten, and cannot eaſily retrieve, becauſe the copy is at the preſs. Dryden.

4. An inſtrument by which any conveyance is made in law.

Thou know'ſt that Banquo and his Fleance lives;
But in them nature's copy 's not eternal.
Shakeſpeare's Macbeth.

5. A picture drawn from another picture.

COPY-BOOK. n. ſ. [copy and book.] A book in which copies are written for learners to imitate.

COPY-HOLD. n. ſ. [copy and hold.] A tenure, for which the tenant hath nothing to ſhew but the copy of the rolls made by the ſteward of his lord's court: for the ſteward, as he enrolls other things done in the lord's court, ſo he regiſters ſuch tenants as are admitted in the court, to any parcel of land or tenement belonging to the manor; and the tranſcript of this is called the court roll, the copy of which the tenant takes from him, and keeps as his only evidence. This is called a baſe tenure, becauſe it holds at the will of the lord; yet not ſimply, but according to the cuſtom of the manor: ſo that if a copy-holder break not the cuſtom of the manor, and thereby forfeit his tenure, he cannot be turned out at the lord's pleaſure. Theſe cuſtoms of manors vary, in one point or other, almoſt in every manor. Some copy-holds are finable, and ſome certain: that which is finable, the lord rates at what fine or income he pleaſes, when the tenant is admitted into it; that which is certain, is a kind of inheritance, and called in many places cuſtomary; becauſe the tenant dying, and the hold being void, the next of blood paying the cuſtomary fine, as two ſhillings for an acre, or ſo, cannot be denied his admiſſion. Some copy-holders have, by cuſtom, the wood growing upon their own land, which by law they could not have. Some hold by the verge in ancient demeſne; and though they hold by copy, yet are they, in account, a kind of freeholder; for, if ſuch a one commit felony, the king hath annum, diem, diem, and vaſtum, as in caſe of freehold. Some others hold by common tenure, called mere copy-hold; and, they committing felony, their land eſcheats to the lord of the manor. Cowell.

If a cuſtomary tenant die, the widow ſhall have what the law calls her free bench in all his copy-hold lands. Addiſon.

COPY-HOLDER. n. ſ. [from copyhold.] One that is poſſeſſed of land in copyhold.

To CO'PY. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To tranſcribe; to write after an original: it has ſometimes out, a kind of pleonaſm.

He who hurts a harmleſs neighbour's peace,
Who loves a lye, lame ſlander helps about,
Who writes a libel, or who copies out. Pope's Eſſay.

2. To imitate; to propoſe to imitation; to endeavour to reſemble.

He that borrows other men's experience, with this deſign of copying it out, poſſeſſes himſelf of one of the greateſt advantages. Decay of Piety.

Set the examples, and their ſouls inflame
To copy out their great forefathers fame.
Dryden's King Arthur.

To copy her few nymphs aſpir'd,
Her virtues fewer ſwains admir'd. Swift.

To CO'PY. v. n.

1. To do any thing in imitation of ſomething elſe.

Some imagine, that whatſoever they find in the picture of a maſter, who has acquired reputation, muſt of neceſſity be excellent, and never fail, when they copy, to follow the bad as well as the good things. Dryden's Dufreſnoy.

2. It has ſometimes from before the thing imitated.

When a painter copies from the life, he has no privilege to alter features and lineaments, under pretence that his picture will look better. Dryden.

3. Sometimes after.

Several of our countrymen, and Mr. Dryden in particular, ſeem very often to have copied after it in their dramatick writings, and in their poems upon love. Addiſon's Spectator.

To COQUE'T. v. a. [from the noun.] To entertain with compliments and amorous tattle; to treat with an appearance of amorous tenderneſs.

You are coquetting a maid of honour, my lord looking on to ſee how the gameſters play, and I raiſing at you both. Swift.

To COQUE'T. v. n. To act the lover; to entice by blandiſhments.

Phyllis, who but a month ago
Was married to the Tunbridge beau,
I ſaw coquetting t'other night,
In publick, with that odious knight. Swift.

COQUE'TRY. n. ſ. [coquetterie, French.] Affectation of amorous advances; deſire of attracting notice.

I was often in company with a couple of charming women, who had all the wit and beauty one could deſire in female companions, without a daſh of coquetry, that from time to time gave me a great many agreeable torments. Addiſon's Spectator.

COQUE'TTE. n. ſ. [coquette, Fr. from coquart, a prattler.] A gay, airy girl; a girl who endeavours to attract notice.

The light coquettes in ſylphs aloft repair,
And ſport and flutter in the fields of air. Pope.

A coquette and a tinder-box are ſparkled. Arbuthnot and Pope.

CO'RACLE. n. ſ. [cwrwgle, Welſh, probably from corium, leather, Lat.] A boat uſed in Wales by fiſhers, made by drawing leather or oiled cloth upon a frame of wicker work.

CO'RAL. n. ſ. [corallium, Latin.]

1. Red coral is a plant of as great hardneſs and ſtony nature, while growing in the water, as it has after long expoſure to the air. The vulgar opinion, that coral is ſoft while in the ſea, proceeds from a ſoft and thin coat, of a cruſtaceous matter, covering it while it is growing, and which is taken off before it is packed up for uſe. The whole coral plant grows to a foot or more in height, and is variouſly ramified. It is thickeſt at the ſtem, and its branches grow gradually ſmaller. It grows to ſtones, without a root, or without any way penetrating them; but as it is found to grow, and take in its nouriſhment, in the manner of plants, and to produce flowers and ſeeds, or at leaſt a matter analogous to ſeeds, it properly belongs to the vegetable kingdom. Hill's Mat. Med.

In the ſea, upon the ſouth-weſt of Sicily, much coral is found. It is a ſubmarine plant; it hath no leaves, but brancheth only when it is under water. It is ſoft, and green of colour; but being brought into the air, it becometh hard and ſhining red, as we ſee. Bacon's Natural Hiſtory.

This gentleman, deſirous to find the nature of coral, cauſed a man to go down a hundred fathom into the ſea, with expreſs orders to take notice whether it were hard or ſoft in the place where it groweth. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

He hears the crackling ſound of coral woods,
And ſees the ſecret ſource of ſubterranean floods.
Dryden's Virgil.

A turret was incloſ'd
Within the wall, of alabaſter white,
And crimſon coral, for the queen of night,
Who takes in Sylvan ſports her chaſte delight.
Dryden.

Or where's the ſenſe, direct or moral,
That teeth are pearl, or lips are coral? Prior.

2. The piece of coral which children have about their necks, imagined to aſſiſt them in breeding teeth.

Her infant grandame's coral next it grew;
The bells ſhe gingled, and the whiſtle blew. Pope.

CORAL-TREE. n. ſ. [corallodendron, Lat.] It is a native of America, and produces very beautiful ſcarlet flowers; but never any ſeeds in the European gardens. Miller.

CO'RALLINE. adj. [corallinus, Lat.] Conſiſting of coral; approaching to coral.

At ſuch time as the ſea is agitated, it takes up into itſelf terreſtrial matter of all kinds, and in particular the coralline matter, letting it fall again, as it becomes calm. Woodward.

CO'RALLINE. n. ſ. [from the adjective.] Coralline is a ſea plant uſed in medicine; but much inferior to the coral in hardneſs, ſometimes greeniſh, ſometimes yellowiſh, often reddiſh, and frequently white. Hill.

In Falmouth there is a ſort of ſand, or rather coralline, that lies under the owſe. Mortim. Huſb.

CO'RALLOID. } adj. [κοραλλοειδης.] Re-
CO'RALLOIDAL. } ſembling coral.

CO'RBAN. n. ſ. [קרבן.] An alms-baſket; a receptacle of charity; a gift; an alms.

They think to ſatisfy all obligations to duty by their corban of religion. King Charles.

Corban ſtands for an offering or gift made to God, or his temple. The Jews ſometimes ſwore by corban, or the gifts offered unto God. If a man made all his fortune corban, or devoted it to God, he was forbidden to uſe it. If all that he was to give his wife, or his father and mother, was declared corban, he was no longer permitted to allow them neceſſary ſubſiſtence. Even debtors were permitted to defraud their creditors, by conſecrating their debt to God. Our Saviour reproaches the Jews, in the Goſpel, with theſe uncharitable and irreligious vows. By this word ſuch perſons were likewiſe meant, as devoted themſelves to the ſervice of God and his temple. Corban ſignifies alſo the treaſury of the temple, where the offerings, which were made in money, were depoſited. Calmet.

CORBE. adj. [courbe, French.] Crooked.

For liker thy head very tottie is,
So thy corbe ſhoulder it leans amiſs.

CO'RDIAL. n. s. [from cor, the heart, Latin.]

1. A medicine that increases the force of the heart, or quickens the circulation.
2. Any medicine that increases strength.

A cordial, properly speaking, is not always what increaseth the force of the heart; for, by increasing that, the animal may be weakened, as in inflammatory disease. Whatever increaseth the natural or animal strength, the force of moving the fluids and muscles, is a cordial: there are such substances as bring the serum of the blood into a proper condition for circulation and nutrition, as broths made of animal substances, milk, ripe fruits, and whatever is endued with a wholesome but not pungent taste. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

3. Any thing that comforts, gladdens, and exhilarates.

Then with some cordials seek for to appease
The inward languor of my wounded heart,
And then my body shall have shortly ease;
But such sweet cordials pass physicians art. Spenser.
Cordials of pity give me now,
For I too weak for purges grow. Cowley.
Your warrior offspring that uphold the crown,
The scarlet honour of your peaceful gowns,
Are the most pleasing objects I can find,
Charms to my sight, and cordials to my mind.
Dryden.

Co'RDIAL. adj.

1. Reviving; invigorating; restorative.

It is a thing I make, which hath the king
Five times redeem'd from death: I do not know
What is more cordial. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.
He only took cordial waters, in which were infused sometimes purgatives. Wiseman's Surgery.

2. Sincere; hearty; proceeding from the heart; without hypocrisy.

Doctrines are infused among christians, which are apt to obstruct or intercept the cordial hope: structing of Christian life of renovation, where no foundation is duly laid. Hammond.
He, with looks of cordial love,
Hung over her enamour'd. Milton.

CORDIA'LITY. n. s. [from cordial.]

1. Relation to the heart.

That the antients had any such respects of cordiality, or reference unto the heart, will much be doubted. Brown.

2. Sincerity; freedom from hypocrisy.

Co'RDIALLY. adv. [from cordial.] Sincerely; heartily; without hypocrisy.

Where a strong inveterate love of sin has made any doctrine or proposition wholly unsuitable to the heart, no argument, or demonstration, no miracle whatsoever, shall be able to bring the heart cordially to close with, and receive it. South's Serm.

Co'RDINER. n. s. [cordonnier, French.] A shoemaker. It is so used in divers statutes.

CO'RDON. n. s. [Fr.] In fortification, a row of stones jutting out before the rampart and the basis of the parapet. Chambers.

CORE. n. s. [cœur, French; cor, Latin.]

1. The heart.

Give me that man
That is not passion's slave, and I will wear him
In my heart's core; ay, in my heart of heart.
Shakespeare's Hamlet.

2. The inner part of any thing.

In the core of the square he raised a tower of a furlong high. Raleigh's History of the World.
Dig out the cores below the surface.
Mortimer's Husbandry.
They wasteful eat,
Through buds and bark, into the blacken'd core.
Thomson.

3. The inner part of a fruit which contains the kernels.

It is reported that trees watered perpetually with warm water, will make a fruit with little or no core at all. Bacon.

4. The matter contained in a boil or sore.

Launce the sore,
And cut the head out, till the core be found:
The secret vice is fed, and gathers ground.
Dryden's Virgil.

5. It is used by Bacon for a body or collection. [from corps, French, pronounced core.]

He was more doubtful of the raising of forces to defend the rebels, than of the resistance itself; for that he was in a core of people whose affection he suspected. Bacon's Henry VII.

COPIA'CEOUS. adj. [coriaceus, Latin.]

1. Consisting of leather.
2. Of a substance resembling leather.

A strong purgative medicine does of the blood most occasion greater secretions and loss of liquid parts, and from thence perhaps spissitude and coriaceous excretions. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

CO'RINTH. n. s. [from the city of that name in Greece.] A small fruit, commonly called currant.

New wine in corinths, now the rasps supply
Delicious draughts. Pitt's Epistles.
The chief riches of Zant consist in corinths, which the inhabitants have in great quantities. Broome.

CORI'NTHIAN Order, is generally reckoned the fourth, but by some the fifth, of the five orders of architecture; and is the most noble, rich, and delicate of them all. Vitruvius ascribes it to Callimachus, a Corinthian sculptor, who is said to have taken the hint by passing by the tomb of a young lady, over which a basket with some of her playthings had been placed by her nurse, and covered with a tile; the whole having been placed over a root of acanthus. As it sprung up, the branches encompassed the basket; but arriving at the tile, bent downwards under the corners of it, forming a kind of volute. Hence Callimachus imitated the basket by the vase of his capital, the tile in the abacus, and the leaves in the volute. Villalpandus imagines the Corinthian capital to have taken its original from an order in the temple of Solomon, whose leaves were those of the palm-tree. The capital is adorned with two rows of leaves, between which little stalks arise, of which the sixteen volutes are formed, which support the abacus. Harris.

Behind these figures are large columns of the Corinthian order, adorned with fruit and flowers. Dryden.

CORK, n. s. [cortex, Lat. korck, Dutch.

Hic dies, anno redeunte, festus
Corticem astrictum pice dimovebit
Amphoræ fumum bibere institutæ
Consule Tullo. Hor.]

Now empreſs fame had publiſh'd the renown
Of Sh——'s coronation through the town.
Dryden's Macfl.

2. The pomp or aſſembly preſent at a coronation.

In penſive thought recal the fancied ſcene,
See coronations riſe on ev'ry green. Pope.

Co'RONER. n. ſ. [from corona.] An officer whoſe duty is to enquire, on the part of the king, how any violent death was occaſioned; for which purpoſe a jury is impannelled.

Go thou and ſeek the coroner, and let him ſit o' my uncle; for he 's in the third degree of drink; he 's drowned. Shakeſpeare.

Co'RONET. n. ſ. [coronetta, Ital. the diminutive of corona, a crown.]

1. An inferiour crown worn by the nobility. The coronet of a duke is adorned with ſtrawberry leaves; that of a marquis has leaves with pearls interpoſed; that of an earl raiſes the pearls above the leaves; that of a viſcount is ſurrounded with only pearls; that of a baron has only four pearls.

In his livery
Walk'd crowns and coronets; realms and iſlands were
As plates dropt from his pocket.
Shakeſpeare's Antony and Cleopatra.

All the reſt are counteſſes.
——Their coronets ſay ſo. Shakeſp. Henry VIII.

Nor could our nobles hope their bold attempt,
Who twin'd crowns, would coronets exempt. Dryd.

Peers and dukes, and all their ſweeping train,
And garters, ſtars, and coronets appear. Pope.

2. An ornamental head-dreſs, in poetical language.

The reſt was drawn into a coronet of gold, richly ſet with pearl. Sidney.

Under a coronet his flowing hair,
In curls, on either cheek play'd. Milton's Par. Loſt.

Co'RPORAL. n. ſ. [corrupted from caporal, French.] The loweſt officer of the infantry, whoſe office is to place and remove the ſentinels.

The cruel corp'ral whiſper'd in my ear,
Five pounds, if rightly tipt, would ſet me clear.
Gay.

CORPORAL of a Ship. An officer that hath the charge of ſetting the watches and ſentries, and relieving them; who ſees that all the ſoldiers and ſailors keep their arms neat and clean, and teaches them how to uſe them. He has a mate under him. Harris.

CO'RPORAL. adj. [corporel, Fr. corpus, Latin.]

1. Relating to the body; belonging to the body.

To relief of lazars and weak age,
Of indigent faint ſouls paſt corporal toil,
A hundred alms-houſes right well ſupplied.
Shakeſpeare's Henry V.

Render to me ſome corporal ſign about her,
More evident than this. Shakeſpeare's Cymbeline.

That God hath been otherwiſe ſeen, with corporal eyes, exceedeth the ſmall proportion of my underſtanding. Raleigh.

Beaſts enjoy greater ſenſual pleaſures, and feel fewer corporal pains, and are utter ſtrangers to all thoſe anxious and tormenting thoughts, which perpetually haunt and diſquiet mankind. Atterbury.

2. Material; not ſpiritual. In the preſent language, when body is uſed philoſophically in oppoſition to ſpirit, the word corporeal is uſed, as, a corporeal being; but otherwiſe corporal. Corporeal is, having a body; corporal, relating to the body. This diſtinction ſeems not ancient.

Whither are they vaniſh'd?
Into the air; and what ſeem'd corporal
Melted, as breath, into the wind.
Shakeſpeare's Macbeth.

And from theſe corporal nutriments, perhaps,
Your bodies may at laſt turn all to ſpirit.
Milton's Paradiſe Loſt.

CORPORA'LITY. n. ſ. [from corporal.] The quality of being embodied.

If this light be not ſpiritual, yet it approacheth neareſt unto ſpirituality; and if it have any corporality, then, of all other, the moſt ſubtile and pure. Raleigh's Hiſtory.

Co'RPORALLY. adv. [from corporal.] Bodily.

The ſun is corporally conjoined with baſiliſcus. Brown.

CO'RPORATE. adj. [from corpus, Lat.]

1. United in a body or community; enabled to act in legal proceſſes as an individual.

Breaking forth like a ſudden tempeſt, he overran all Munſter and Connaught, defacing and utterly ſubverting all corporate towns that were not ſtrongly walled. Spenſer on Ireland.

The nobles of Athens being not at this time a corporate aſſembly, therefore the reſentment of the commons was uſually turned againſt particular perſons. Swift.

2. General; united.

They anſwer in a joint and corporate voice,
That now they are at fall. Shakeſpeare's Timon.

CO'RPORATENESS. n. f. [from corporate.] The ſtate of a body corporate; a community. Dict.

CORPORA'TION. n. f. [from corpus, Lat.] A corporation is a body politick, authorized by the king's charter to have a common ſeal, one head officer or more, and members, able, by their common conſent, to grant or receive, in law, any thing within the compaſs of their charter: even as one man may do by law all things, that by law he is not forbidden; and bindeth the ſucceſſors, as a ſingle man binds his executor or heir. Cowell.

Of angels we are not to conſider only what they are, and do, in regard of their own being; but that alſo which concerneth them, as they are linked into a kind of corporation amongſt themſelves, and of ſociety with men. Hooker.

Of this we find ſome foot-ſteps in our law,
Which doth her root from God and nature take;
Ten thouſand men ſhe doth together draw,
And of them all one corporation make. Davies.

CO'RPORATURE. n. f. [from corpus, Lat.] The ſtate of being embodied. Dict.

CORPO'REAL. adj. [corporeus, Latin.]

1. Having a body; not immaterial; not ſpiritual. See CORPORAL.

The ſwiftneſs of thoſe circles attribute,
Though numberleſs, to his omnipotence,
That to corporeal ſubſtances could add
Speed almoſt ſpiritual. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt.

Having ſurveyed the image of God in the ſoul, we are not to omit thoſe characters that God imprinted upon the body, as much as a ſpiritual ſubſtance could be pictured upon a corporeal. South's Sermons.

God being ſuppoſed to be a pure ſpirit, cannot be the object of any corporeal ſenſe. Tillotſon.

The courſe is finiſh'd which thy fates decreed,
And thou from thy corporeal priſon freed,
Dryden's Fables.

Fix thy corporeal and internal eye
On the young gnat, or new engender'd fly. Prior.

2. It is uſed by Swift inaccurately for corporal.

I am not in a condition to make a true ſtep even on Ainſbury Downs; and I declare, that a corporeal falſe ſtep is worſe than a political one. Swift.

CORPOREʼITY. n. f. [from corporeus, Latin.] Materiality; the quality of being embodied; the ſtate of having a body; bodilineſs.

Since philoſophy affirmeth, that we are middle ſubſtances between the ſoul and the body, they muſt admit of ſome corporeity, which ſuppoſeth weight or gravity. Brown.

It is the ſaying of divine Plato, that man is nature's horizon, dividing betwixt the upper hemiſphere of immaterial intellects, and this lower of corporeity. Glanville's Sceptis.

The one attributed corporeity to God, and the other ſhape and figure. Stillingfleet.

CORPORIFICA'TION. n. f. [from corporify.] The act of giving body or palpability.

To CORPO'RIFY. v. a. [from corpus, Lat.] To embody; to inſpiſſate into body. Not uſed.

A certain ſpirituous ſubſtance, extracted out of it, is miſtaken for the ſpirit of the world corporified. Boyle.

CORPS. CORPSE. } n. f. [corps, Fr. corpus, Latin.]

1. A body.

That lewd ribauld
Laid firſt his filthy hands on virgin cleene,
To ſpoil her dainty corſe, ſo fair and ſheene,
Of chaſtity and honour virginal. Spenſer.

2. A body, in contempt.

Though plenteous, all too little ſeems
To ſtuff this maw, this vaſt unhide-bound corps. Milton.

He looks as man was made, with face erect,
That ſcorns his brittle corps, and ſeems aſham'd
He 's not all ſpirit. Dryden's Don Sebaſtian.

3. A carcaſe; a dead body; a corſe.

Not a friend
Greet my poor corps, where my bones ſhall be thrown. Shakeſpeare.

There was the murder'd corps in covert laid,
And violent death in thouſand ſhapes diſplay'd.
Dryden's Fables.

See where the corps of thy dead ſon approaches. Addiſon.

The corpſe was laid out upon the floor by the emperor's command: he then bid every one light his flambeau, and ſtand about the dead body. Addiſon's Guardian.

4. The body, in oppoſition to the ſoul.

Cold numbneſs ſtreight bereaves
Her corps of ſenſe, and th' air her ſoul receives. Denham.

5. A body of forces.

CO'RPULENCE. CO'RPULENCY. } n. f. [corpulentia, Lat.]

1. Bulkineſs of body; fleſhineſs; fulneſs of fleſh.

To what a cumberſome unwieldineſs,
And burdenous corpulence, my love had grown. Donne.

That is but one ſpecies of corpulency; for there may be bulk without fat, from the great quantity of muſcular fleſh, the caſe of robuſt people. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

2. Spiſſitude; groſſneſs of matter.

The muſculous fleſh ſerves for the vibration of the tail; the heavineſs and corpulency of the water requiring a great force to divide it. Ray on the Creation.

CO'RPULENT. adj. [corpulentus, Latin.] Fleſhy; bulky; having great bodily bulk.

We ſay it is a fleſhy ſtile, when there is much periphraſis, and circuit of words; and when, with more than enough, it grows fat and corpulent. Ben Jonſon's Diſcoveries.

Exceſs of nouriſhment is hurtful; for it maketh the child corpulent, and growing in breadth rather than in height. Bacon.

CO'RPUSCLE. n. f. [corpuſculum, Lat.] A ſmall body; a particle of matter; an atom; a little fragment.

It will add much to our ſatisfaction, if thoſe corpuſcles can be diſcovered with microſcopes. Newton's Opticks.

Who knows what are the figures of the little corpuſcles that compoſe and diſtinguiſh different bodies? Watts's Logick.

CORPU'SCULAR. CORPUSCULA'RIAN. } adj. [from corpuſculum, Lat.] Relating to bodies; compriſing bodies. It is the diſtinguiſhing epithet of that philoſophy, which attempts the rational ſolution of all phyſical appearances by the action of one body upon another.

As to natural philoſophy, I do not expect to ſee any principles propoſed, more comprehenſive and intelligible than the corpuſcularian or mechanical. Boyle.

This may be ſaid, that the modern corpuſcularians talk, in moſt things, more intelligibly than the peripateticks. Bentley.

The mechanical or corpuſcular philoſophy, though peradventure the eldeſt, as well as the beſt in the world, had lain dead for many ages in contempt and oblivion. Bentley.

CO'RRACLE. See CORRICLE.

To CORRA'DE. v. a. [corrado, Latin.] To rub off; to wear away by frequent rubbing; to ſcrape together.

CORRADIA'TION. n. f. [con and radius, Latin.] A conjunction of rays in one point.

The impreſſion of colour worketh not but by a cone of direct beams, or right lines, whereof the baſis is in the object, and the vertical point in the eye; ſo as there is a corradiation, and conjunction of beams. Bacon's Natural Hiſtory.

To CORRE'CT. v. a. [corrigo, correctum, Latin.]

1. To puniſh; to chaſtiſe; to diſcipline.

Sad accidents, and a ſtate of affliction, is a ſchool of virtue; it corrects levity, and interrupts the confidence of ſinning. Taylor.

After he has once been corrected for a lye, you muſt be ſure never after to pardon it in him. Locke on Education.

Children being to be reſtrained by the parents only in vicious things, a look or nod only ought to correct them when they do amiſs. Locke on Education.

2. To amend; to take away faults in writings, life, or things.

This is a defect in the firſt make of ſome men's minds, which can ſcarce ever be corrected afterwards, either by learning or age. Burnet's Theory, Preface.

Correcting Nature, from what actually ſhe is in individuals, to what ſhe ought to be, and what ſhe was created. Dryden.

I writ, becauſe it amuſed me; I corrected, becauſe it was as pleaſant to me to correct as to write. Pope's Preface.

The mind may cool, and be at leiſure to attend to its domeſtick concern: to conſider what habit wants to be corrected, and what inclination to be ſubdued. Rogers.

3. To obviate the qualities of one ingredient by another, or by any method of preparation.

O happy mixture! wherein things contrary do ſo qualify and correct the one the danger of the other's exceſs, that neither boldneſs can make us preſume, as long as we are kept under with the ſenſe of our own wretchedneſs; nor, while we truſt in the mercy of God through Chriſt Jeſus, fear be able to tyrannize over us. Hooker.

As, in habitual gout or ſtone,
The only thing that can be done,
Is to correct your drink and diet,
And keep the inward foe in quiet. Prior.

In caſes of acidity, water is the proper drink: its quality of relaxing may be corrected by boiling it with ſome animal ſubſtances; as ivory or hartſhorn. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

4. To remark faults.

CORRE'CT. adj. [correctus, Latin.] Reviſed, or finiſhed with exactneſs; free from faults.

What verſe can do, he has perform'd in this,
Which he preſumes the moſt correct of his. Dryden's Aur. Prol.

Always uſe the moſt correct editions: various readings will be only troubleſome where the ſenſe is complete. Felton.

CORRE'CTION. n. f. [from correct.]

1. Puniſhment; diſcipline; chaſtiſement; penalty.

Wilt thou, pupil like,
Take thy correction mildly, kiſs the rod?
Shakeſpeare's Richard II.

An offenſive wife,
That hath enrag'd him on to offer ſtrokes,
As he is ſtriking, holds his infant up,
And hangs reſolv'd correction in the arm
That was upreas'd to execution. Shak. Henry IV.

We are all but children here under the great maſter of the family; and he is pleaſed, by hopes and fears, by mercies and corrections, to inſtruct us in virtue. Watts.

One fault was too great lenity to her ſervants, to whom ſhe gave good counſel, but too gentle correction. Arbuthnot.

2. Alteration to a better ſtate; the act of taking away faults; amendment.

Another poet, in another age, may take the ſame liberty liberty with my writings; if, at leaſt, they live long enough to deſerve correction. Dryden's Fab. Pref.

3. That which is ſubſtituted in the place of any thing wrong.

Corrections or improvements ſhould be adjoined, by way of note or commentary, in their proper places. Watts.

4. Reprehenſion; animadverſion.

They proceed with judgment and ingenuity, eſtabliſhing their aſſertions not only with great ſolidity, but ſubmitting them alſo unto the correction of future diſcovery. Brown.

5. Abatement of noxious qualities, by the addition of ſomething contrary.

To make ambitious, wholeſome, do not take
A dram of country's dulneſs; do not add
Corrections, but as chymiſts purge the bad. Donne.

CORRE'CTIONER. n. ſ. [from correction.] One that has been in the houſe of correction; a jail-bird. This ſeems to be the meaning in Shakeſpeare.

I will have you ſoundly twinged for this, you blue-bottle rogue! you filthy famiſhed correctioner! Shakeſpeare's Henry IV.

CORRE'CTIVE. adj. [from correct.] Having the power to alter or obviate any bad qualities.

Mulberries are pectoral, corrective of bilious choler. Arbuthnot.

CORRE'CTIVE. n. ſ.

1. That which has the power of altering or obviating any thing amiſs.

The hair, wool, feathers, and ſcales which all animals of prey do ſwallow, are a ſeaſonable and neceſſary correctives, to prevent their greedineſs from filling themſelves with too ſucculent a food. Ray on the Creation.

Humanly ſpeaking, and according to the method of the world, and the little correctives ſupplied by art and diſcipline, it ſeldom fails but an ill principle has its courſe, and nature makes good its blow. South's Sermons.

2. Limitation; reſtriction.

There ſeems to be ſuch an inſtance in the regimen which the human ſoul exerciſeth in relation to the body, that, with certain checks and exceptions, may give ſome kind of explication or adumbration thereof. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

CORRE'CTLY. adv. [from correct.] Accurately; exactly; without faults.

There are ladies, without knowing what rules and participles, adverbs and prepoſitions are, ſpeak as properly and as correctly as moſt gentlemen who have been bred up in the ordinary methods of grammar ſchools. Locke on Education.

Such lays as neither ebb nor flow,
Correctly cold, and regularly low.
Pope's Eſſay on Criticiſm.

CORRE'CTNESS. n. ſ. [from correct.] Accuracy; exactneſs; freedom from faults.

Too much labour often takes away the ſpirit by adding to the poliſhing; ſo that there remains nothing but a dull correctneſs, a piece without any conſiderable faults, but with few beauties.
Dryden's Dufreſnoy.

The ſoftneſs of the fleſh, the delicacy of the ſhape, air, and poſture, and the correctneſs of deſign, in this ſtatue, are inexpreſſible. Addiſon on Italy.

Late, very late, correctneſs grew our care,
When the tir'd nation breath'd from civil war.
Pope.

Thoſe pieces have never before been printed from the true copies, or with any tolerable degree of correctneſs. Swift.

CORRE'CTOR. n. ſ. [from correct.]

1. He that amends, or alters, by puniſhment or animadverſion.

How many does zeal urge rather to do juſtice on ſome ſins, than to forbear all ſin! How many rather to be correctors than practiſers of religion.
Spratt's Sermons.

With all his faults, he ſets up to be an univerſal reformer and corrector of abuſes, and a remover of grievances. Swift.

2. He that reviſes any thing to free it from faults; as the corrector of the preſs, that amends the errours committed in printing.

I remember a perſon, who, by his ſtyle and literature, ſeems to have been the corrector of a hedge preſs in Little Britain, proceeding gradually to an author. Swift.

3. In medicine.

Such an ingredient in a compoſition, as guards againſt or abates the force of another; as the lixivial ſalts prevent the grievous vellications of reſinous purges, by dividing their particles, and preventing their adheſion to the inteſtinal membranes; and as ſpices and carminative ſeeds aſſiſt the operation of ſome cathartick, by diſſipating wind. In making a medicine, ſuch a thing is called a corrector, which deſtroys or diminiſhes a quality that could not otherwiſe be diſpenſed with; thus turpentines are correctors of quickſilver, by deſtroying its fluxility, and making it capable of mixture. Quincy.

To CO'RRELATE. v. n. [from con and relatus, Latin.] To have a reciprocal relation, as father and ſon.

CO'RRELATE. n. ſ. One that ſtands in the oppoſite relation.

It is one thing for a father to ceaſe to be a father, by caſting off his ſon; and another for him to ceaſe to be ſo, by the death of his ſon: in this the relation is at an end for want of a correlate.
South.

CORRE'LATIVE. adj. [con and relativus, Latin.] Having a reciprocal relation, ſo that the exiſtence of one in a particular ſtate depends upon the exiſtence of another.

Father and ſon, huſband and wife, and ſuch other correlative terms, ſeem nearly to belong one to another. South.

Giving is a relative action, and ſo expreſſes a correlation to ſomething beſides the giver; a thing and ſervice properly, unleſs ſomething be accepting with the other. South.

CORRE'LATIVENESS. n. ſ. [from correlative.] The ſtate of being correlative.

CORRE'PTION. n. ſ. [correptio, correptus, Latin.] Objurgation; chiding, reprehenſion; reproof.

If we muſt be talking of other people's faults, let it not be to defame, but to amend them, by converting our detraction into admonition and ſpiritual correption. Government of the Tongue.

To CORRESPO'ND. v. n. [con and reſpondeo, Latin.]

1. To ſuit; to anſwer; to be proportionate; to be adequate to; to be adapted to; to ſit.

The days, if one be compared with another ſucceſſively throughout the year, are found not to be equal, and will not juſtly correſpond with any artificial or mechanical equal meaſures of time. Holder on Time.

Words being but empty ſounds, any farther than they are ſigns of our ideas, we cannot but aſſent to them, as they correſpond to thoſe ideas we have, but no farther than that. Locke.

2. To keep up commerce with another by alternate letters.

CORRESPO'NDENCE. } n. ſ. [from correſpond.]
CORRESPO'NDENCY. }

1. Relation; reciprocal adaptation of one thing to another.

Between the law of their heavenly operations, and the actions of men in this our ſtate of mortality, ſuch correſpondence there is as maketh it expedient to know in ſome ſort the one, for the other's more perfect direction. Hooker.

Whatever we fancy, things keep their courſe; and their habitudes, correſpondencies, and relations keep the ſame to one another. Locke.

2. Intercourſe; reciprocal intelligence.

I had diſcovered thoſe unlawful correſpondencies they had uſed, and engagements they had made to embroil my kingdoms. King Charles.

Sure the villains hold a correſpondence
With the enemy, and thus they would betray us.
Denham.

It happens very oddly, that the pope and I ſhould have the ſame thought much about the ſame time: my enemies will be apt to ſay, that we hold a correſpondence together, and act by concert in this matter. Addiſon.

3. Friendſhip; interchange of offices or civilities.

Let ſuch military perſons be aſſured, and well reputed of, rather than factious and popular; holding alſo good correſpondence with the other great men in the ſtate. Bacon.

CORRESPO'NDENT. adj. [from correſpond.] Suitable; adapted; agreeable; anſwerable.

What good or evil is there under the ſun, what action correſpondent or repugnant unto the law which God hath impoſed upon his creatures, but in or upon it God doth work, according to the law which himſelf hath eternally preſcribed it? Hooker.

And as five ſenſes to earthly, ſo to heavenly bread,
Five wits correſpondent to earthly, ſo to heavenly deed. Dryden.

CORRESPO'NDENT. n. ſ. One with whom intelligence or commerce is kept up by mutual meſſages or letter.

He was at firſt commanded to retire to his own houſe, and not to converſe but with thoſe who had been his friends and correſpondents before. Clarendon.

CORRESPO'NSIVE. adj. [from correſpond.] Anſwerable; adapted to any thing.

Peace unto my gates, and quietneſs
And correſponſive and ruling love,
Speed to the houſe I love. Sandys's Paraphraſe.

2. [In architecture.] A gallery or long iſle round about a building, leading to ſeveral chambers at a diſtance from each other. Harris.

There is ſomething very noble in the ancient palaces, though the high walls and corridors that were round it are almoſt entirely ruined. Addiſon on Italy.

CO'RRIGIBLE. adj. [from corrigo, Lat.]

1. That which may be altered or amended.

2. He who is a proper object of puniſhment; puniſhable.

He was taken up very ſhort, and adjudged corrigible for ſuch preſumptuous language.
Howel's Vocal Foreſt.

3. Corrective; having the power to correct. Not proper, nor uſed.

Our boſoms are our gardens, to the which our wills are gardeners; ſo that, if we will either have it fertile with idleneſs, or manured with induſtry, the power and corrigible authority of this lies in our will. Shakeſpeare's Othello.

CORRI'VAL. n. ſ. [con and rival.] Rival; competitor.

They had governours commonly out of the two families of the Geraldines and Butlers, both adverſaries and corrivals one againſt the other.
Spenſer on Ireland.

He, that doth redeem her thence, might wear
Without corrival all her dignities. Shakeſp. H. IV.

CORRI'VALRY.

Corri'valry. n. ſ. [from corrival.] Competition; oppoſition.

Corro'borant. adj. [from corroborate] Having the power to give ſtrength.

There be divers ſorts of bracelets fit to comfort the ſpirits; and they be of three intentions, refrigerant, corroborant, and aperient. Bacon's Nat. Hiſt.

To Corro'borate. v. a. [con and roboro, Latin.]

1. To confirm; to eſtabliſh.

Machiavel well noteth, though in an ill-favoured inſtance, there is no truſting to the force of nature, nor to the bravery of words, except it be corroborate by cuſtom. Bacon.

2. To ſtrengthen; to make ſtrong.

To fortify imagination there be three ways; the authority whence the belief is derived, means to quicken and corroborate the imagination, and means to repeat it and refreſh it. Bacon.

It was ſaid that the prince himſelf had, by the ſight of foreign courts, and obſervation on the different nature of people, and rules of government, much excited and awaked his ſpirits, and corroborated his judgment. Wotton.

As any limb well and only exerciſed grows ſtronger, the nerves of the body are corroborated thereby. Wotton.

Corrobora'tion. n. ſ. [from corroborate.] The act of ſtrengthening or confirming; confirmation by ſome additional ſecurity; addition of ſtrength.

The body is not preſerved much for the benefit of the members. Raleigh's Hiſtory.

Corro'borative. adj. [from corroborate.] Having the power of increaſing ſtrength.

[illegible] with almoſt [illegible] by [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

Coarſe hoary moulded bread the ſoldiers thruſt upon the points of their ſpears, railing againſt Ferdinand, who with ſuch corrupt and peſtilent bread would feed them. Knolles.

2. Unſound; putrid.

As ſuperfluous fleſh did rot,
Amendment ready ſtill at hand did wait,
To pluck it out with pincers fiery hot,
That ſoon in him was left no corrupt jot. Spenſer.

3. Vitious; tainted with wickedneſs; without integrity.

Let no corrupt communication proceed out of your mouth, but that which is good to the uſe of edifying. Epheſians, iv. 29.

Corrupt, corrupt, and tainted in deſire. Shakeſp.

Theſe kind of knaves I know, which in this plainneſs
Harbour more craft, and more corrupter ends,
Than twenty ſilky ducking obſervants.
Shakeſpeare's King Lear.

Some, who have been corrupt in their morals, have yet been infinitely ſolicitous to have their children piouſly brought up. South's Sermons.

CORRU'PTER. n. ſ. [from corrupt.] He that taints or vitiates; he that leſſens purity or integrity.

Away, away, corrupters of my faith! Shakeſp.

From the vanity of the Greeks, the corrupters of all truth, who without all ground of certainty vaunt their antiquity, came the errour firſt of all. Raleigh's Hiſtory of the World.

Thoſe great corrupters of Chriſtianity, and indeed of natural religion, the Jeſuits. Addiſon.

CORRUPTIBI'LITY. n. ſ. [from corruptible.] Poſſibility to be corrupted.

CORRU'PTIBLE. adj. [from corrupt.]

1. Suſceptible of deſtruction by natural decay, or without violence.

Our corruptible bodies could never live the life they ſhall live, were it not that they are joined with his body which is incorruptible, and that his is in ours as a cauſe of immortality. Hooker.

It is a devouring corruption of the eſſential mixture, which, conſiſting chiefly of an oily moiſture, is corruptible through diſſipation.
Harvey on Conſumptions.

The ſeveral parts of which the world conſiſts being in their nature corruptible, it is more than probable, that, in an infinite duration, this frame of things would long ſince have been diſſolved.
Tillotſon.

2. Suſceptible of external depravation; poſſible to be tainted or vitiated.

CORRU'PTIBLENESS. n. ſ. [from corruptible.] Suſceptibility of corruption.

2. A dead body; a carcaſe: a poetical word.

That from her body, full of filthy ſin,
He reft her hateful head, without remorſe;
A ſtream of coal-black blood forth guſhed from her corſe. Spenſer.

Set down the corſe; or, by ſaint Paul,
I'll make a corſe of him that diſobeys.
Shakeſpeare's Richard III.

What may this mean?
That thou, dead corſe, again in complete ſteel
Reviſit'ſt thus the glimpſes of the moon,
Making night hideous? Shakeſpeare's Hamlet.

Here lay him down, my friends,
Full in my ſight, that I may view at leiſure
The bloody corſe, and count thoſe glorious wounds.
Addiſon.

CO'RSELET. n. ſ. [corſelet, French.] A light armour for the forepart of the body.

Some ſhirts of maile, ſome coats of plate put on,

I shall thee give yond' casse for thy pain. Spenser.

COST. n. s. [kost, Dutch. As this word is found in the remotest Teutonick dialects, even in the Islandick, it is not probably derived to us from the Latin constо; though it is not unlikely that the French couster comes from the Latin.]

1. The price of any thing.
2. Sumptuousness; luxury.

The city woman bears
The cost of princes on unworthy shoulders. Shak.

Let foreign princes vainly boast
The rude effects of pride and cost
Of vaster fabricks, to which they Contribute nothing but the pay. Waller.

3. Charge; expence.

While he found his daughter maintained without his cost, he was content to be deaf to any noise of infamy. Sidney.

I shall never hold that man my friend,
Whose tongue shall ask me for one penny cost,
To ransom home revolted Mortimer. Shak. H. IV.

Have we eaten at all of the king's cost? or hath he given us any gift? 2 Samuel, xix. 42.

And wilt thou, O cruel boast!
Put poor nature to such cost?
O! 'twill undo our common mother,
To be at charge of such another. Crashaw.

It is strange to see any ecclesiastical pile, not by ecclesiastical cost and influence, rising above ground; especially in an age in which men's mouths are open against the church, but their hands shut towards it. South's Sermons.

He whose tale is best, and pleases most,
Should win his supper at our common cost.
Dryden's Fables.

Fourteen thousand pounds are paid by Wood for the purchase of his patent: what were his other visible costs, I know not; what his latent, is variously conjectured. Swift.

4. Loss; fine; detriment.

1. A head.

Take him over the costard with the hilt of thy sword. Shakespeare's Richard III.

2. An apple round and bulky like the head.

Many country vicars are driven to shifts; and if our greedy patrons hold us to such conditions, they will make us turn costard mongers, graziers, or sell ale. Burton on Melancholy.

CO'STIVE. adj. [constipatus, Lat. constipé, Fr.]

1. Bound in the body; having the excretions obstructed.

When the passage of the gall becomes obstructed, the body grows costive, and the excrements of the belly white. Brown.

While faster than his costive brain indites,
Philo's quick hand in flowing letters writes;
His case appears to me like honest Teague's,
When he was run away with by his legs. Prior.

2. Close; unpermeable.

Clay in dry seasons is costive, hardening with the sun and wind, till unlocked by industry, so as to admit of the air and heavenly influences.
Mortimer's Husbandry.

Co'stiveness. n. s. [from costive.] The state of the body in which excretion is obstructed.

Costiveness disperses malign putrid fumes out of the guts and mesentery into all parts of the body, occasioning head-aches, fevers, loss of appetite, and disturbance of concoction. Harvey.

Costiveness has ill effects, and is hard to be dealt with by physick; purging medicines rather increasing than removing the evil. Locke on Education.

Co'stliness. n. s. [from costly.] Sumptuousness; expensiveness.

Though not with curious costliness, yet with cleanly sufficiency, it entertained me. Sidney.

Nor have the frugaller sons of fortune any reason to object the costliness; since they frequently pay dearer for less advantageous pleasures.
Glanville's Scepsis.

Co'stly. adj. [from cost.] Sumptuous; expensive; of a high price.

Costly thy habit as thy purse can buy,
But not expressed in fancy; rich, not gaudy;
For the apparel oft proclaims the man.
Shakespeare's Hamlet.

Leave for a while thy costly country-seat;
And, to be great indeed, forget
The nauseous pleasures of the great. Dryden.

The chapel of St. Laurence will be perhaps the most costly piece of work on the earth, when completed. Addison.

He is here speaking of Paradise, which he represents as a most charming and delightful place; abounding with things not only useful and convenient, but even the most rare and valuable, the most costly and desirable. Woodward's Nat. Hist.

Co'stmary. n. s. [costus, Lat.] An herb.

Co'strel. n. s. [supposed to be derived from coster.] A bottle. Skinner.

Bacon's Henry VII.

Co'TTIER. n. s. [from cot.] One who inhabits a cot. Diet.

CO'TTON. n. s. [named, according to Skinner, from the down that adheres to the mala cotonea, or quince, called by the Italians cotogni; whence cottone, Ital. cotton, French.]

1. The down of the cotton-tree.

The pin ought to be as thick as a rowling pin, and covered with cotton, that its hardness may not be offensive. Wiseman.

2. Cloth made of cotton.

Co'TTON. n. s. A plant.

The species are, 1. Shrubby cotton. 2. The most excellent American cotton, with a greenish seed. 3. Annual shrubby cotton, of the island of Providence. 4. The tree cotton. 5. Tree cotton, with a yellow flower. The first sort is cultivated plentifully in Candia, Lemnos, Cyprus, Malta, Sicily, and at Naples; as also between Jerusalem and Damascus, from whence the cotton is brought annually into these northern parts of Europe. The cotton is the wool which incloses or wraps up the seeds, and is contained in a kind of brown husk, or seed-vessel, growing upon this shrub. It is from this sort that the vast quantities of cotton are taken, which furnish our parts of the world. The second and third sorts are annual: these are cultivated in the West Indies in great plenty. But the fourth and fifth sorts grow in Egypt: these abide many years, and often arrive to be trees of great magnitude. Miller.

To Co'TTON. v. n.

1. To rise with a knap.

2. To cement; to unite with: a cant word.

A quarrel [illegible] and of you being turned to off, in which case it will not be easy to cotton with another. Swift.

To COUCH. v. n. [coucher, French.]

1. To lie down on a place of repose.

If I court more women, you'll couch with more men. Shakespeare.

Doth not the gentleman
Deserve as full, as fortunate a bed,
As ever Beatrice shall couch upon? Shakespeare.

When love's fair goddess
Couch'd with her husband in his golden bed.
Dryden's Æneid.

2. To lie down on the knees, as a beast to rest.

Trees bent their heads to hear him sing his wrongs,
Fierce tygers couch'd around, and loll'd their fawning tongues. Dryden's Virgil.

These, when death
Comes like a rushing lion, couch like spaniels,
With lolling tongues, and tremble at the paw.
Dryden.

3. To lie down in secret, or in ambush.

We'll couch i' th' castle-ditch, till we see the light of our fairies. Shak. Merry Wives of Windsor.

The eyes of Argus couched in a furrow, and was pelted over for dead, until a horse was brought for his defence. Hayward.

Doth couch his limbs, there golden sleep doth reign.
Shakespeare.

2. To lay down any thing in a bed, or stratum.

If the weather be warm, we immediately couch malt about a foot thick; but if a hotter season require it, we spread it on the floor much thinner.
Mortimer's Husbandry.

The sea and the land make one globe, and the waters couch themselves, as close as may be, to the centre of this globe, in a spheroidal convexity.
Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

3. To bed; to hide in another body.

It is at this day in use at Gaza, to couch potsherds, or vessels of earth, in their walls, to gather the wind from the top, and to pass it down in spouts into rooms. Bacon's Natural History.

4. To involve; to include; to comprise.

But who will call those noble, who deface,
By meaner acts, the glories of their race;
Whose only title to their fathers' fame
Is couch'd in the dead letters of their name?
Dryden's Juvenal.

That great argument for a future state, which St. Paul hath couched in these words I have read to you. Asterbury's Sermons.

5. To include secretly; to hide: with under.

The foundation of all parables, is some analogy or similitude between the topical or allusive part of the parable, and the thing couched under it, and intended by it. South.

There is all this, and more, that lies naturally couched under this allegory. L'Estrange.

The true notion of the institution being lost, the tradition of the deluge, which was couched under it, was thereupon at length suspended and lost.
Woodward's Natural History.

6. To lay close to another.

And over all with brazen scales war-arm'd,
Like plated coat of steel, so couched near,
That nought might pierce. Spenser.

7. To fix the spear in the rest, in the posture of attack.

The knight 'gan fairly couch his steady spear,
And fiercely ran at him with courageous might.
Spenser.

Before each van
Prick forth the airy knights, and couch their spears,
Till thickest legions close. Milton's Paradise Lost.

The former wav'd in air
His flaming sword; Æneas couch'd his spear.
Dryden's Æneid.

8. To depress the condensed crystalline humour or film that overspreads the pupil of the eye. This is improperly called couching the eye, for couching the cataract: with equal impropriety they sometimes speak of couching the patient.

Some artist, whose nice hand
Couches the cataracts, and clears his sight,
And all at once a flood of glorious light
Comes rushing on his eyes. Dennis.

Whether the cataract be wasted by being separated from its vessels, I have never known positively, by dissecting one that had been couched.
Sharp.

COUCH. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A seat of repose, on which it is common to lie down dressed.

So Satan fell; and straight a fiery globe
Of angels on full sail of wing flew nigh,
Who on their plumy vans received him soft
From his uneasy station, and upbore,
As on a floating couch, through the blithe air.
Milton's Paradise Regain'd.

To Hymen ill-betrothed unwedded maids,
And by their guilty limbs in Tyrian beds.
Dryden's Virgil's Georgicks.

O ye immortal pow'rs, that guard the just,
Watch round his couch, and soften his repose!
Addison's Cato.

2. A bed; a place of repose.

With such old counsellors they did advise,
And by frequenting sacred groves grew wise.
Waller.

3. One whose province is to deliberate and advise upon publick affairs.

You are a counsellor,
And by that virtue no man dare accuse you.
Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

Of counsellors there are two sorts: the first, consultum mihi, as I may term them; such are the prince of Wales, and others of the king's sons: but the ordinary sort of counsellors are such as the king, out of due consideration of their worth and abilities, and withal of their fidelity to his person and to his crown, calleth to be of council with him, and his ordinary government.
Bacon's Advice to Villiers.

4. One that is consulted in a case of law; a lawyer.

A counsellor bred up in the knowledge of the municipal statute laws, may honestly inform a just prince how far his prerogative extends.
Dryden's Juvenal, Dedication.

COUNSELLORSHIP. n. s. [from counsellor.] The office or post of a privy counsellor.

Of the great offices and officers of the kingdom, the most part are such as cannot well be severed from the counsellorship.
Bacon's Advice to Villiers.

To COUNT. v. a. [compter, Fr. computare, Latin.]

1. To number; to tell.

Here thro' this grate I can count every one,
And view the Frenchmen. Shakespeare's Henry VI.

The vicious count their years; virtuous, their acts. Johnson.

For the preferments of the world, he that would reckon up all the accidents that they depend upon, may as well undertake to count the sands, or to sum up infinity. South.

When men in sickness lingring lie,
They count the tedious hours by months and years.
Dryden.

Argos now rejoice, for Thebes lies low;
Thy slaughter'd sons now smile, and think they won,
When they can count more Theban ghosts than theirs. Dryden.

2. To preserve a reckoning.

Some people in America counted their years by the coming of certain birds amongst them at their certain seasons, and leaving them at others. Locke.

3. To reckon; to place to an account.

He believed in the Lord, and he counted it to him for righteousness. Genesis, xv. 6.

Dryden's Aurengzebe.

COUNTERTU'RN. n. f. [counter and turn.] The cataſtaſis, called by the Romans ſtatus, the height and full growth of the play, we may call properly the counterturn, which deſtroys that expectation, embroils the action in new difficulties, and leaves you far diſtant from that hope in which it found you. Dryden on Dramatick Poeſy.

To COUNTERVA'IL. v. a. [contra and valeo, Latin.] To be equivalent to; to have equal force or value; to act againſt with equal power.

In

In some men there may be found such qualities as are able to countervail those exceptions which might be taken against them, and such men's authority is not likely to be shaken off. Hooker.

And therewithal he fiercely at him flew,
And with important outrage him assail'd;
Who, soon prepar'd to field, his sword forth drew,
And him with equal valour countervail'd.
Fairy Queen.

The outward streams, which descend, must be of so much force as to countervail all that weight whereby the ascending side does exceed the other. Wilkins's Dædalus.

We are to compute, that, upon balancing the account, the profit at last will hardly countervail the inconveniencies that go along with it. L'Estrange.

COUNTERVA'IL. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Equal weight; power or value sufficient to obviate any effect or objection.
2. That which has equal weight or value with something else.

I take it, she that carries up the train,
Is that old noble lady, the duchess of Norfolk.
—It is, and all the rest are countesses.
Shakspeare's Henry VIII.

It is the peculiar happiness of the countess of Abingdon to have been so truly loved by you while she was living, and so gratefully honoured after she was dead. Dryden.

CO'UNTING-HOUSE. n. s. [count and house.] The room appropriated by traders to their books and accounts.

Men in trade seldom think of laying out money upon land, till their profit has brought them in more than their trade can well employ; and then idle bags cumbering their counting-houses, put them upon employing them. Locke.

CO'UNTLESS. adj. [from count.] Innumerable; without number; not to be reckoned.

Ay, tear for tear, and loving kiss for kiss,
Thy brother Marcus tenders on thy lips:
O were the sum of these that I should pay
Countless and infinite, yet would I pay them. Shak.

But oh, her mind, that orcus which includes
Legions of mischief, countless multitudes
Of former curses. Donne.

By one countless sum of woes oppress,
Weary with cares, and ignorant of rest,
We find the vital springs relax'd and worn;
Thus, thro' the round of age, to childhood we return. Prior.

I see, I cried, his woes, a countless train;
I see his friends o'erwhelm'd beneath the main.
Pope's Odyssey.

CO'UNTRY. n. s. [contrée, Fr. contrata, Low Latin; supposed to be contracted from conterrata.]

1. A tract of land; a region, as distinguished from other regions.

They require to be examined concerning the descriptions of those countries of which they would be informed. Spratt.

2. The parts of a region distant from cities or courts; rural parts.

CO'UNTRYMAN. n. s. [from country and man.]

1. One born in the same country, or tract of ground. Locke.

See, who comes here?
My countryman, but yet I know him not.
Shakspeare's Macbeth.

Homer, great bard! so fate ordain'd, arose;
And, bold as were his countrymen in fight,
Snatch'd their fair actions from degrading prose,
And set their battles in eternal light. Prior.

The British soldiers act with greater vigour under the conduct of one whom they do not consider only as their leader, but as their countryman.
Addison on the War.

2. A rustick; one that inhabits the rural parts.

All that have business to the court, and all countrymen coming up to the city, leave their wives in the country. Graunt.

3. A farmer; a husbandman.

A countryman took a hare in his corn. L'Estr.

CO'UNTY. n. s. [comté, Fr. comitatus, Latin.]

1. A shire; that is, a circuit or portion of the realm, into which the whole land is divided, for the administration of justice; so that there is no part of the kingdom but what lieth within some county. Every county is governed by a yearly officer, called a sheriff, who puts in execution all the commands and judgments of the king's courts. Of these counties four are termed county palatines, as that of Lancaster, Chester, Durham, and Ely. A county palatine is a jurisdiction of so high a nature, that the chief governors of them, by special charter from the king, send out all writs in their own name, and do all things touching justice as absolutely as the prince himself, only acknowledging him their superior and sovereign. But this power has, by a statute in Henry VIII. his time, been much abridged. There are likewise counties corporate, which are certain cities or ancient boroughs upon which our princes have thought good to bestow extraordinary liberties. Of these London is one, York another, the city of Chester a third, and Canterbury a fourth. And to these may be added many more; as the county of the town of Kingston upon Hull, the county of the town of Haverfordwest, and the county of Litchfield. County is, in another signification, used for the county-court. Cowel.

Discharge your powers unto their several counties, As we will ours. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

He sought his death the last county sessions, where he would go to see justice done to a poor widow-woman, and her fatherless children.
Addison's Spectator.

2. An earldom.
3. [Comté.] A count; a lord. Now wholly obsolete.

The gallant, young, and noble gentleman,
The county Paris. Shakespeare's Romeo and Juliet.

He made Hugh Lupus county palatine of Chester, and gave that earldom to him and his heirs, to hold the same ita liberè ad gladium, sicut rex tenebat ipse liberè ad coronam.

COUPE'E. n. s. [French.] A motion in dancing, when one leg is a little bent, and suspended from the ground, and with the other a motion is made forwards.
Chambers.

CO'UPLE. n. s. [couple, Fr. copula, Lat.]

1. A chain or tie that holds dogs together.

I'll keep my stable-stand where
I lodge my wife; I'll go in couples with her,
Than when I feel and see no further trust her.
Shakespeare.

It is in some sort with friends as it is with dogs in couples; they should be of the same size, humour. L'Estrange.

2. Two; a brace.

He was taken up by a couple of shoemakers, by them brought to life again.

A schoolmaster, who shall teach my boy Latin, yours, I will provide; yea, though the charge cost me a couple of hundred pounds.

A piece of crystal included a couple of drops, which looked like water when they were shaken, though perhaps they are nothing but bubbles of air. Addison on Italy.

By adding one to one, we have the complex idea of a couple. Locke.

A mate and his female.

So shall all the couples three,
Ever true in loving be. Shak. Midſ. Night's Dr.

Oh! alas!
I left a couple, that 'twixt heaven and earth
Might thus have ſtood, begetting wonder, as
You gracious couple do. Shakeſp. Winter's Tale.

I have read of a feigned commonwealth, where the married couple are permitted, before they contract, to ſee one another naked. Bac. New Atlantis.

He ſaid: the careful couple join their tears,
And then invoke the gods with pious prayers. Dryden.

All ſucceeding generations of men are the progeny of one primitive couple. Bentley's Sermons.

After this alliance,
Let tigers match with hinds, and wolves with ſheep,
And every creature couple with his foe. Dryden's Spaniſh Friar.

COUPLE-BEGGAR. n. ſ. [couple and beggar.] One that makes it his buſineſs to marry beggars to each other.

No couple-beggar in the land
E'er join'd ſuch numbers hand in hand. Swift.

COU'PLET. n. ſ. [French.]

Two verſes; a pair of rhimes.

Then would they caſt away their pipes, and holding hand in hand, dance by the only cadence of their voices, which they would uſe in ſinging their ſhort couplets, whereto the one half beginning, the other half ſhould anſwer. Sidney.

Then at the laſt, as only couplet fraught
With ſome commanding thing they call a thought;
A needleſs Alexandrine ends the ſong,
That, like a wounded ſnake, drags its ſlow length along. Pope.

In Pope I cannot read a line,
But with a ſigh I wiſh it mine;
When he can in one couplet fix
More ſenſe than I can do in ſix,
It gives me ſuch a jealous fit,
I cry, pox take him and his wit! Swift.

2. A pair, as of doves.

Anon, as patient as the female dove,
Ere that her golden couplets are diſcloſ'd,
His ſilence will ſit drooping. Shakeſpeare's Hamlet.

COURAGE. n. ſ. [courage, Fr. from cor, Latin.] Bravery; active fortitude; ſpirit of enterprize.

I have no reliſh of them. Shakeſpeare's Macbeth.

Their diſcipline
Now mingled with their courage. Shak. Cymbeline.

Hope arms their courage; from them tow'rs they throw
Their darts with double force, and drive the foe. Dryden.

Courage, that grows from conſtitution, very often forſakes a man when he has occaſion for it; and when it is only a kind of inſtinct in the ſoul, it breaks out on all occaſions, without judgment or diſcretion. That courage which ariſes from the ſenſe of our duty, and from the fear of offending Him that made us, acts always in an uniform manner, and according to the dictates of right reaſon. Addiſon's Guardian.

Nothing but the want of common courage was the cauſe of their misfortunes. Swift.

COURA'GEOUS. adj. [from courage.]

1. Brave; daring; bold; enterprizing; adventurous; hardy; ſtout.

And he that is courageous among the mighty, ſhall flee away naked in that day. Amos, ii. 16.

Swift as quicksilver it courses through
The nat'ral gates and alleys of the body.
Shakespeare's Hamlet.
The blood, before cold and settled, left the liver white and pale, which is the badge of pusillanimity and cowardice; but the sherris warms it, and makes it course from the inwards to the parts extreme.
Shakespeare's Henry IV.
She did so course o'er my exteriours, with such a greedy intention, that the appetite of her eye did seem to scorch me up like a burning glass.
Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.
Ten brace and more of greyhounds, snowy fair,
And tall as stags, ran loose, and cours'd around his chair. Dryden.
All, at once
Relapsing quick, as quickly re-ascend
And mix, and thwart, extinguish, and renew,
All ether coursing in a maze of light.
Thomson's Autumn.

CO'URSER. n. s. [from course; courser, French.]
1. A swift horse; a war horse: a word not used in prose.
He proudly pricketh on his courser strong,
And Atin ay him pricks with spurs of shame and wrong. Spenser.
Then to his absent guest the king decreed
A pair of coursers, born of heav'nly breed;
Who from their nostrils breath'd etherial fire,
Whom Circe stole from her celestial sire.
Dryden's Æneid.
Th' impatient courser pants in every vein,
And, pawing, seems to beat the distant plain;
Hills, vales, and floods appear already cross'd,
And, ere he starts, a thousand steps are lost. Pope.
2. One who pursues the sport of coursing hares.
A leash is a learn thong, by which a falconer holds his hawk, or a courser leads his greyhound. Harmer.

COURT. n. s. [cour, Fr. koert, Dut. curtis, low Latin.]
1. The place where the prince resides; the palace.
Here do you keep a hundred knights and squires,
Men so disorderly, so debauch'd and bold,
That this our court, infected with their manners,
Shews like a riotous inn, epicurism and lust
Make it more like a tavern, or a brothel,
Than a grac'd palace. Shakespeare's King Lear.
It shall be an habitation of dragons, and a court for owls. Isaiah, xxvi. 13.
His exactness, that every man should have his due, was such, that you would think he had never seen a court: the politeness with which this justice was administered, would convince you he never had lived out of one. Prior's Dedication.
A suppliant to your royal court I come.
Pope's Odyssey.
2. The hall or chamber where justice is administered.
Are you acquainted with the difference
That holds this present question in the court?
Shakespeare.
St. Paul being brought unto the highest court in Athens, to give an account of the doctrine he had preached concerning Jesus and the resurrection, took occasion to imprint on those magistrates a future state. Atterbury.
3. Open space before a house.
You must have, before you come to the front, three courts; a green court plain, with a wall about it; a second court of the same, but more garnished with little turrets, or other embellishments, upon the wall; and a third court, to square with the front, not to be built but inclosed with a mean wall. Bacon.
Suppose it were the king's bedchamber, yet the meanest man in the tragedy must come and dispatch his business, rather than in the lobby or court (which is fitter for him) for fear the stage should be cleared, and the scenes broken. Dryden.
4. A small opening inclosed with houses, and paved with broad stones, distinguished from a street.
5. Persons who compose the retinue of a prince.
Their wisdom was so highly esteemed, that some of them were always employed to follow the courts of their kings, to advise them. Temple.
6. Persons who are assembled for the administration of justice.
7. Any jurisdiction, military, civil, or ecclesiastical.
If any noise or soldier you perceive
Near to the wall, by some apparent sign
Let us have knowledge at the court of guard.

The archbishop
Of Canterbury, accompanied with other
Learned and reverend fathers of his order,
Held a late court at Dunstable. Shak. Henry VIII.
I have at last met with the proceedings of the court baron, held in that behalf. Spectator.
8. The art of pleasing; the art of insinuation.
Him the prince with gentle court did board.
Spenser.
Hast thou been never base? Did love ne'er beget
Thy frailer virtue, to betray thy friend?
Flatter me, make thy court, and say it did;
Kings in a crowd would have their vices hid.
Dryden's Aurengzebe.
Some sort of people, placing a great part of their happiness in strong drink, are always forward to make court to my young master, by offering that which they love best themselves. Locke.
I have been considering why poets have such ill success in making their court, since they are allowed to be the greatest and best of all flatterers; the defect is, that they flatter only in print or in writing. Swift to Gay.
9. It is often used in composition in most of its senses.

To COURT. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To woo; to solicit a woman to marriage.
Follow a shadow, it flies you;
Seem to fly it, it will pursue:
So court a mistress, she denies you;
Let her alone, she will court you. Ben Jonson's Forest.
Fir'd with her love, and with ambition led,
The neighb'ring princes court her nuptial bed.
Dryden's Æneid.
Alas! Sempronius, wouldst thou talk of love
To Marcia, whilst her father's life's in danger?
Thou might'st as well court the pale trembling vestal,
While she beholds the holy flame expiring.
Addison's Cato.
Ev'n now, when silent scorn is all they gain,
A thousand court you, though they court in vain.
Pope.
2. To solicit; to seek.
Their own ease and satisfaction would quickly teach children to court commendation, and avoid doing what they found condemned.
Locke on Education.
3. To flatter; to endeavour to please.

'Tis a brave night to cool a courtezan. Shakespeare's King Lear.

With them there are no stews, no dissolute houses, no courtesans, nor any thing of that kind; nay they wonder, with detestation, at you in Europe, which permit such things. Bacon's New Atlantis.

The Corinthian is a column lasciviously decked like a courtezan. Wotton.

Charaxus, the brother of Sappho, in love with Rhodope the courtezan, spent his whole estate upon her. Addison.

Co'urtesy. n. f. [courtoisie, Fr. cortesia, Italian.]

1. Elegance of manners; civility; complaisance.

Sir, you are very welcome to our house:
It must appear in other ways than words,
Therefore I scant this breathing courtesy.
Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.

Who have seen his estate, his hospitality, his courtesy to strangers. Peacham.

He, who was compounded of all the elements of affability and courtesy towards all kind of people, brought himself to a habit of neglect, and even of rudeness, towards the queen. Clarendon.

Courtesy is fonnest found in lowly shades
With smoky rafters, than in tapestry halls,
And courts of princes, where it first was nam'd.
Milton.

So gentle of condition was he known,
That through the court his courtesy was blown.
Dryden's Fables.

2. An act of civility or respect.

You spurn'd me such a day; another time
You call'd me dog; and, for these courtesies,
I'll lend you thus much money.
Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.

Repose you there, while I to the hard house
Return, and force their scanted courtesy.
Shakespeare's King Lear.

When I was last at Exeter,
The mayor in courtesy shew'd me the castle.
Shakespeare's Richard III.

Sound all the lofty instruments of war,
And by that musick let us all embrace;
For heav'n to earth some of us never shall
A second time do such a courtesy.
Shakespeare's Henry IV.

Other states, assuredly, cannot be justly accused for not staying for the first blow; or for not accepting Polyphemus's courtesy, to be the last that shall be eaten up. Bacon.

3. The reverence made by women.

Some country girl, scarce to a courtesy bred,
Would I much rather than Cornelia wed,
If, supercilious, haughty, proud, and vain,
She brought her father's triumphs in her train.
Dryden's Juvenal.

The poor creature was as full of courtesies as if I had been her godmother: the truth on't is, I endeavoured to make her look somewhat Christian-like. Congreve's Old Bachelor.

4. A tenure, not of right, but by the favour of others; as, to hold upon courtesy.

5. Courtesy of England. A tenure by which, if a man marry an inheritance, that is, a woman seised of land, and getteth a child of her that comes alive into the world, though both the child and his wife die forthwith, yet, if she were in possession, shall he keep the land during his life, and is called tenant per legem Angliæ, or by the courtesy of England. Cowell.

To Co'urtesy. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To perform an act of reverence: it is now only used of women.

Toby approaches, and courtsies there to me.

If I should meet her in my way,
We hardly courtsy to each other. Prior.

Co'urtier. n. f. [from court.]

1. One that frequents, or attends the courts of princes.

He hath been a courtier, he swears.——
If any man doubt that, let him put me to my purgation. I have trod a measure, I have flattered a lady; I have been politick with my friend, smooth with mine enemy; I have undone three tailors, I have had four quarrels, and like to have fought one. Shakespeare's As you like it.

You are a flattering boy; now, I see you'll be a courtier. Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.

You know I am no courtier, nor versed in state affairs. Bacon.

The principal figure in a picture, is like a king among his courtiers, who ought to dim the lustre of his attendants. Dryden.

2. One that courts or solicits the favour of another.

What
Made thee, all honour'd, honest Roman Brutus,
With the arm'd rest, courtiers of beauteous freedom,
To drench the capitol? Shakesp. Antony and Cleop.

There was not among all our princes a greater courtier of the people than Richard III.; not out of fear, but wisdom. Suckling.

Co'urtlike. adj. [court and like.] Elegant; polite.

Our English tongue is, I will not say as sacred as the Hebrew, or as learned as the Greek, but as fluent as the Latin, as courteous as the Spanish, as courtlike as the French, and as amorous as the Italian. Camden's Remains.

Co'urtliness. n. f. [from courtly.] Elegance of manners; grace of mien; complaisance; civility.

Dispraise my work, than praise it frostily.
Ben Jonson.

Co'urtly. adj. [from court.] Relating or retaining to the court; elegant; soft; flattering.

In our own time (except some courtly strains)
No where prose thrives but Addison's remains. Pope.

Co'urtly. adv. In the manner of courts; elegantly.

This can produce nothing so courtly writ, or which expresses so much the conversation of a gentleman, as Sir John Suckling. Dryden on Dramatick Poetry.

Co'urtship. n. f. [from court.]

1. The act of soliciting favour.

He paid his courtship with the crowd,
And loved modest pride aloud. Swift.

2. The solicitation of a woman to marriage.

Be more, more supremely unkind than thou'rt now,
To me, to me, and from the violence of love
A thousand times be more unkind to me.
Shakespeare's Measure for Measure.

In tedious courtship of your mistress suit,
And ere we kindness get, we must do more.
Dryden's Indian Emperor.

Every man in the time of courtship, and in the first entrance of marriage, puts on a behaviour to my correspondence this day suit. Addison's Guard.

3. Civility; elegance of manners.

My courtship to an university,
My modesty I gave to ladies bate;
My patience to a gamester's thate. Donne.

Co'usin. n. f. [cousin, Fr. consanguineus, Lat.]

1. Any one collaterally related more remotely than a brother or sister.

Macbeth unseams him
O valiant cousin! worthy gentleman! Shakespeare.
Tydeus, my cousin! O my brother's child!
Unhappy hast thou, this day, the blood spilled
Of my dear kindred. Shakesp. Rom. and Juliet.
Thou art, great lord, my father's fame's son,
And now art mean to get Priam's blood.
Shakespeare's Troilus and Cressida.

2. A title given by the king to a nobleman, particularly to those of the council.

Cow. n. f. [in the plural anciently kine, or kren, now commonly cows; cu, Sax. koe, Dutch.] The female of the bull; the horned animal with cloven feet, kept for her milk and calves.

We see that the horns of oxen and cows, for the most part, are larger than the bull's; which is caused by abundance of moisture, which in the horns of the bull faileth. Bacon.

After the fever is diminished, asses and goats milk may be necessary; yea, a diet of cows milk alone. Wyeman's Surgery.

Then, leaving in the fields his grazing cows,
He sought himself some hospitable house:
Good Creton entertain'd his godlike guest.
Dryden's Fables.

To

To Cow. v. a. [from coward, by contraction.] To depress with fear; to oppress with habitual timidity.

Macduff was from his mother's womb
Untimely ripp'd.
——Accursed be that tongue that tells me so,
For it hath cow'd my better part of man.
Shakespeare's Macbeth.

By reason of their frequent revolts, they have drawn upon themselves the pressures of war so often, that it seems to have somewhat cowed their spirits. Howel's Vocal Forest.

For when men by their wives are cow'd,
Their horns of course are understood. Hudibras.

Cow-wheat. n. s. [cow and wheat.] A plant.

Co'ward. n. s. [couard, Fr. of uncertain derivation.]

1. A poltroon; a wretch whose predominant passion is fear.

Pyrrhus used much wonder, beyond belief, as was able to lead Mutineers to courage, though he had been from a coward. Sidney.

There was a soldier that vaunted, before Julius Cæsar, of the hurts he had received in his face. Cæsar, knowing him to be but a coward, told him, You were best take heed, next time you run away, how you look backs. Bacon.

Some are brave one day, and cowards another, as great captains have often told me, from their own experience and observation. Temple.

A coward does not always escape with disgrace, but sometimes also he loses his life. South.

Tremble ye not, oh friends! and coward fly,
Doom'd by the stern Telemachus to die!
Pope's Odyssey.

2. It is sometimes used in the manner of an adjective.

Having more man than wit about me, I drew;
And rais'd the house with loud and coward cries.
Shakespeare.

Invading fears repel my coward joy,
And like a tyrant the present bliss destroy. Prior.

Co'wardice. n. s. [from coward.] Fear; habitual timidity; pusillanimity; want of courage.

Certes, Sir knight, ye been too much to blame,
Thus for to blot the honour of the dead;
And with foul cowardice his carcase shame,
Whose living hands immortaliz'd his name.
Fairy Queen.

Gallant and fearless courage will turn into a native and heroick valour, and make them hate the cowardice of doing wrong. Milton on Education.

None was disgrac'd; for falling is no shame,
And cowardice alone is loss of fame:
The vent'rous knight is from the saddle thrown,
But 'tis the fault of fortune, not his own.
Dryden's Fables.

This great, this holy, this terrible Being, is present to all our affections; sees every treacherous inclination of our heart to desert his service; and treasures up, against the day of his wrath, the secret cowardice which deters us from asserting his causes, which prevails on us to compliment the vices of the great, to applaud the libertine, and laugh with the prophane. Rogers's Sermons.

Co'wardliness. n. s. [from cowardly.] Timidity; cowardice.

Co'wardly. adj. [from coward.]

1. Fearful; timorous; pusillanimous.

An Egyptian toothpicker made Antonius believe that his genius, otherwise brave and confident, was in the presence of Octavius poor and cowardly. Bacon's Natural History.

2. Mean; befitting a coward; proceeding from fear.

I do find it cowardly and vile,
For fear of what might fall, so to prevent
The time of life. Shakespeare's Julius Cæsar.

Let all such as can enlarge their consciences like hell, and style a cowardly silence in Christ's cause discretion, know, that Christ will one day scorn them. Soul's.

Co'wardly. adv. In the manner of a coward; meanly; vilely.

He sharply reproved them as men of no courage, who had most cowardly turned their backs upon their enemies. Knolles.

Co'wardship. n. s. [from coward.] The character or qualities of a coward; meanness; a word not now in use.

A very paltry boy, and more a coward than a hare: his dishonesty appears in leaving his friend here in necessity, and denying him; and for his cowardship, ask Fabian. Shakespeare.

To Co'wer. v. n. [covrrian, Welsh; courber, Fr. or perhaps borrowed from the manner in which a cow sinks on her knees.] To sink by bending the knees; to stoop; to shrink.

Let the part be put over the man's head above water, then he cower down, and the part be pressed down with him. Bacon.

The splitting rocks cow'r in the sinking sands,
And would not dash me with their ragged sides.
Shakespeare.

As thus he spake, each bird and beast beheld,
Approaching two and two, these cow'ring low
With blandishment, each bird stoop'd on his wing.
Milton.

Our dame sits cow'ring o'er a kitchen fire;
I draw fresh air, and nature's works admire. Dryd.

Co'wish. adj. [from To cow, to awe.] Timorous; fearful; mean; pusillanimous; cowardly. Not in use.

It is the cowish terrour of his spirit,
That dares not undertake; he'll not feel wrong,
Which tie him to an answer. Shakesp. King Lear.

Co'wkeeper. n. s. [cow and keeper.] One whose business is to keep cows.

The terms cowk-eper and hogherd are not to be used in our poetry; but there are no finer words in the Greek language. Broome.

Cowl. n. s. [cuzle, Saxon; cucullus, Latin.]

1. A monk's hood.

You may imagine that Francis Cornfield did scratch his elbow, when he had sweetly invented, to signify his name, saint Francis with his friery cowl in a cornfield. Camden.

What differ more, you cry, than crown and cowl?
I'll tell you, friend, a wise man and a fool. Pope.

2. [Perhaps from cool, cooler, a vessel in which hot liquor is set to cool.] A vessel in which water is carried on a pole between two.

Cowl-staff. n. s. [cowl and staff.] The staff on which a vessel is supported between two men.

Mounting him upon a cowl-staff,
Which (tossing him something high)
He apprehended to be Pegasus. Suckling.

The way by a cowl-staff is safer: the staff must have a bunch in the middle, somewhat wedge-like, and covered with a soft bolster. Wiseman.

Co'wslip. n. s. [paralysis; cuyslippe, Sax. as some think, from their resemblance of scent to the breath of a cow; perhaps from growing much in pasture grounds, and often meeting the cow's lip.]

Cowslip is also called pagil, grows wild in the meadows, and is a species of primrose. Miller.

He might as well say, that a cowslip is as white as a lily. Sidney.

Where the bee sucks, there suck I;
In a cowslip's bell I lie. Shakespeare's Tempest.

Thy little sons
Permit to range the pastures; gladly they
Will mow the cowslip posies, faintly sweet. Philips.

Cows-lungwort. n. s. A species of Mullein.

Co'xcomb. n. s. [cock and comb, corrupted from cock's comb.]

1. The top of the head.

2. The comb resembling that of a cock which licensed fools wore formerly in their caps.

There, take my coxcomb: why, this fellow has banished two of his daughters, and did the third a blessing against his will: if thou follow him, thou must needs wear my coxcomb. Shakespeare.

3. A fop; a superficial pretender to knowledge or accomplishments.

I sent to her,
By this same coxcomb that we have i' th' wind,
Tokens and letters, which she did resend. Shakesp.

I scorn, quoth she, thou coxcomb silly,
Quarter or council from a foe. Hudibras.

It is a vanity for every pretending coxcomb to make himself one of the party still with his betters. L'Estrange.

They overflowed with smart repartees, and were only distinguished from the intended wits by being called coxcombs, though they deserved not so fair a dalous a name. Dryden.

Some are bewilder'd in the maze of schools,
And some made coxcombs, nature meant but fools.
Pope.

4. A kind of red flower.

Coxco'mical. adj. [from coxcomb.] Foppish; conceited: a low word, unworthy of use.

Because, as he was a very natural writer, and they were without prejudice, without prepossession, without affectation, and without the influence of coxcomical, senseless cabal, they were at liberty to receive the impressions which things naturally made on their minds. Dennis.

Coy. adj. [coi, French; from quietus, Latin.]

Let the queen pay never ſo fully, let the muſter-maſter view them never ſo diligently, let the deputy or general look to them never ſo exactly, yet they can cozen them all. Spenſer.

Goring loved no man ſo well but that he would cozen him, and expoſe him to publick mirth for having been cozened. Clarendon.

He that ſuffers a government to be abuſed by careleſſneſs or neglect, does the ſame thing with him that maliciouſly and corruptly ſets himſelf to cozen it. L'Eſtrange.

You are not obliged to a literal belief of what the poet ſays; but you are pleaſed with the image, without being cozened by the fiction. Dryden.

What if I pleaſe to lengthen out his date
A day, and take a pride to cozen fate.
Dryden's Aurengzebe.

Children may be cozened into a knowledge of the letters, and be taught to read, without perceiving it to be any thing but a ſport. Locke on Education.

COZENAGE. n. ſ. [from cozen.] Fraud; deceit; artifice; fallacy; trick; cheat; the practice of cheating.

They ſay this town is full of cozenage,
As nimble jugglers that deceive the eye,
Diſguiſed cheaters. Shakeſpeare.

Wiſdom without honeſty is meer craft and cozenage; and therefore the reputation of honeſty muſt be gotten, which cannot be but by living well: a good life is a main argument. Ben Jonſ. Diſc.

There's no ſuch thing as that we beauty call,
It is meer cozenage all;
For though ſome long ago
Liv'd certain colours mingled ſo and ſo,
That doth not tie me now from chuſing new.
Suckling.

Imaginary appearances offer themſelves to our impatient minds, which entertain theſe counterfeits, without the leaſt ſuſpicion of their cozenage.
Glanville's Sceppſis.

Scrape an age? none would live half years again.
Yet all hope pleaſure in what yet remains;
And from the dregs of life think to receive
What the firſt ſprightly running could not give.
Dryden's Aurengzebe.

But all theſe are trifles, if we conſider the fraud and cozenage of treating men and ſhopkeepers.
Swift.

CO'ZENER. n. ſ. [from couzen.] A cheater; a defrauder.

Indeed, Sir, there are cozeners abroad, and therefore it behoves men to be wary.

And he's compoſed of harſhneſs. Shak. Tempeſt.

2. Harſh; unpleaſing.

That was when
Three crabbed months had ſour'd themſelves to death,
Ere I could make thee open thy white hand,
And clepe thyſelf my love. Shak. Winter's Tale.

How charming is divine philoſophy!
Not harſh and crabbed, as dull fools ſuppoſe,
But muſical as is Apollo's lute,
And a perpetual feaſt of nectar'd ſweets,
Where no crude ſurfeit reigns. Milton.

3. Difficult; perplexing.

Beſide, he was a ſhrewd philoſopher,
And had read ev'ry text and glaſs over;
What'er the crabbedeſt author hath,
He underſtood b' implicit faith. Hudibras.

Lucretius had choſen a ſubject naturally crabbed.
Dryden.

Your crabbed rogues that read Lucretius
Are againſt gods, you know. Prior.

1. To ask with earnestness; to ask with submission; to beg; to entreat.

What one petition is there found in the whole Litany, whereof we shall ever be able at any time to say, that no man living needeth the grace or benefit therein craved at God's hands? Hooker.

As for my noble friends, I crave their pardons;
But for the mutable rank-scented many,
Let them regard me as I do not flatter.
Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

The poor people, not knowing where to hide themselves from the fury of their enemies, nor of whom to crave help, fled as men and women all amazed. Knolles.

I would crave leave here, under the word actions, to comprehend the forbearance too of any actions proposed. Locke.

Each ardent nymph the rising current craves,
Each shepherd's pray'r retards the parting waves.
Prior.

2. To ask insatiably.

The subjects arm'd, the more their princes gave,
Th' advantage only took the more to crave.
Daniel.

Him dost thou mean, who, spite of all his store,
Is ever craving, and will still be poor?
Who cheats for halfpence, and who dost the state
To save a farthing in a ferry-boat? Dryd. Persius.

3. To long; to wish unreasonably.

Levity pushes us on from one vain desire to another, in a regular vicissitude and succession of cravings and satiety. L'Estrange.

He is actually under the power of a temptation, and the sway of an impetuous lust; both hurrying him to satisfy the cravings of it by some wicked action. South.

4. To call for importunately.

Bestow
Your needful counsel to our businesses,
Which crave the instant use. Shakesp. King Lear.

The antecedent concomitants and effects of such a constitution, are acids, taken in too great quantities; sour eructations, and a craving appetite, especially of terrestrial and absorbent substances. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

5. Sometimes with for before the thing sought.

Once one may crave for love,
But more would prove
This heart too little, that too great. Suckling.

CRA'VEN. n. f. [derived by Skinner from crave, as one that craves or begs his life: perhaps it comes originally from the noise made by a conquered cock.

1. A cock conquered and dispirited.

What, is your crest a coxcomb?——
——A combless cock, so Kate will be my hen.
—No cock of mine; you crow too like a craven.
Shakespeare.

2. A coward; a recreant; a weak-hearted spiritless fellow.

Is it fit this soldier keep his oath?
——He is a craven and a villain else. Shak. K. H. V.

CRA'VEN. adj. Cowardly; base.

Upon his coward breast
A bloody cross, and on his craven crest
A bunch of hairs discolour'd diversly. Spenser.

Whether it be
Bestial oblivion, or some craven scruple,
Of thinking too precisely on th' event;
A thought which, quarter'd, hath but one part wisdom,
And ever three parts coward. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

Yet if the innocent some mercy find,
From cowardice, not ruth, did that proceed;
His noble foes durst not his craven kind
Exasperate by such a bloody deed. Fairfax.

To CRA'VEN. v. a. [from the noun.] To make recreant or cowardly.

'Gainst self-slaughter
There is a prohibition so divine,
That cravens my weak hand. Shakesp. Cymbeline.

The tin ore paſſeth to the crazing mill, which, between two grinding ſtones, bruiſeth it to a fine ſand. Carew's Survey.

3. To crack the brain; to impair the intellect.

I lov'd him, friend,
No father his ſon dearer, true, to tell thee,
That grief hath crazed my wits. Shak. K. Lear.

Wickedneſs is a kind of voluntary craze, and a choſen diſtraction; and every ſinner does wilder and more extravagant things than any man can do that is crazed and out of his wits, only with this ſad difference, that he knows better what he does. Tillotſon.

CRA'ZEDNESS. n. ſ. [from crazed.] Decrepitude; brokenneſs; diminution of intellect.

The return, as of men that have ſick bodies, ſo likewiſe of the people in the crazedneſs of their minds, poſſeſſed with diſlike and diſcontentment at things preſent, is to imagine that any thing would help them. Hooker.

CRA'ZINESS. n. ſ. [from crazy.]

1. State of being crazy; imbecility; weakneſs.

You hing other places, ſhe may be ſaid to hold them as one ſhould do a wolf by the ears; nor will I ſpeak now of the craziness of her title to many of them. Howel's Vocal Forreſt.

2. Weakneſs of intellect.

CRA'ZY. adj. [ecraſé, French.]

1. Broken; decrepit.

To CREAK. v. n. [corrupted from crack.]

1. To make a harſh protracted noiſe.

Let not the creaking of ſhoes, nor the ruſtling of ſilks, betray thy poor heart to women. Shakeſpeare's King Lear.

No door there was th' unguarded houſe to keep,
On creaking hinges turn'd, to break his ſleep.
Dryden.

2. It is ſometimes uſed of animals.

The creaking locuſts with my voice conſpire,
They fried with heat, and I with fierce deſire.
Dryden.

CREAM. n. ſ. [cremor, Latin.]

1. The unctuous or oily part of milk, which, when it is cold, floats on the top, and is changed by the agitation of the churn into butter; the flower of milk.

It is not your inky brows, your black ſilk hair,
Your bugle eye-balls, nor your cheek of cream,
That can entame my ſpirits to your worſhip.
Shakeſpeare.

I am as vigilant as a cat to ſteal cream.
Shakeſpeare's Henry IV.

Cream is matured and made to ripen ſpeedily, by putting in cold water; which, as it melts, gathers down the whey. Bacon's Natural Hiſtory.

How the drudging goblin ſwe[illegible],
To earn his cream-bowl duly [illegible],
When in one night, ere glimpſe of morn,
His ſhadowy flail hath thraſh'd the corn [illegible]
Let ſour [illegible]
With ſwilling bowls of ſtrong [illegible]

Milk, ſtanding ſome time, naturally ſeparates into an oily ſubſtance called cream, and into whey, or thin watery liquor, called ſkimmed milk. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

CRY'STAL. n. f. [κρύσταλλος.]

1. Cryſtals are hard, pellucid, and naturally colourleſs bodies, of regularly angular figures, compoſed of ſimple, not filamentous plates, not flexile or elaſtick, giving fire with ſteel, not fermenting with acid menſtrua, and calcining in a ſtrong fire. There are many various ſpecies of it produced in different parts of the globe. Hill on Foſſils.

Iſland cryſtal is a genuine ſpar, of an extremely fine, clear, and fine texture, ſeldom either blemiſhed with flaws or ſpots, or ſtained with any other colour. A remarkable property of this body, which has much employed the writers on opticks, is its double refraction; ſo that if it be laid over a black line, drawn on paper, two lines appear in the place of one. Hill.

Water, as it ſeems, turneth into cryſtal; as is ſeen in divers caves, where the cryſtal hangeth in [illegible]. Bacon.

If cryſtal be done, it is not immediately converted to the conſiſtence of ice, but either by a mi[illegible] Brown.

Cryſtal contains known and diſtinct bodies by the [illegible] and of its extraction, [illegible] which are ever [illegible] Woodward.

2. Cryſtal is alſo uſed for a factitious body caſt in the glaſs-houſes, called alſo cryſtal glaſs, which is carried to a degree of perfection beyond the common glaſs; though it come far ſhort of the whiteneſs and vivacity of the natural cryſtal. Chambers.

3. Cryſtals [in chymiſtry] expreſs ſalts or other matters ſhot or congealed in manner of cryſtal. Chambers.

If the menſtruum be overcharged, when it ſhoots into the mould will ſhoot not certain cryſtal. Bacon.

CRY'STAL. adj.

1. Conſiſting of cryſtal.

Then, ſuppoſe, thou king of Gods,
Thy cryſtal window ope, look out. Shakſp. Cymb.

2. Bright; clear; tranſparent; lucid; pellucid.

In groves we live, and lie on moſſy beds,
Bathe in cryſtal ſtreams that murmur through the meads. Dryden.

CRY'STALLINE. adj. [cryſtallinus, Latin.]

1. Conſiſting of cryſtal.

Mount eagle to my palace cryſtalline. Shakſpeare's Cymbeline.

We provided ourſelves with ſome ſmall receivers, blown of cryſtalline glaſs. Locke.

2. Bright: clear; pellucid; tranſparent.

The clarifying of water is an experiment tending to the health; beſides the pleaſure of the eye, while water is cryſtalline. It is effected by caſting in and placing reboles at the head of the current, that the water may ſtrain through them. Bacon's Natural Hiſtory.

He on the wings of cherub rode ſublime
On the cryſtalline ſky, in ſaphir thron'd
Illuſtrious far and wide. Milton.

CRY'STALLINE Humour. n. f. The ſecond humour of the eye, that lies immediately next to the aqueous behind the uvea, oppoſite to the papilla, nearer the fore part than the back part of the globe. It is the leaſt of the humours, but much more ſolid than any of them. Its figure, which is convex on both ſides, reſembles two unequal ſegments of ſpheres, of which the moſt convex is on its back-ſide, which makes a ſmall cavity in the glaſſy humour in which it lies. It is covered with a fine coat, called aranea.

The parts of the eye are made convex, and eſpecially the cryſtalline humour, which is of a lenticular figure, convex on both ſides. Ray on the Creation.

CRYSTALLIZA'TION. n. ſ. [from cryſtallize.]

1. Congelation into cryſtals.

Such a combination of ſaline particles as reſembles the form of a cryſtal, variouſly modified, according to the nature and texture of the ſalts. The method is by diſſolving any ſaline body in water, and filtering it, to evaporate, till a film appear at the top, and then let it ſtand to ſhoot; and this it does by that attractive force which is in all bodies, and particularly in ſalt, by reaſon of its ſolidity: wherein, when the menſtruum or fluid, in which ſuch particles flow, is fixed enough or evaporated, ſo that the ſaline particles are within each other's attractive powers, they draw one another more than they are drawn by the fluid, then will they run into cryſtals. And this is peculiar to thoſe, that, let them be ever ſo much divided and reduced into minute particles, yet when they are formed into cryſtals, they each of them reaſſume their proper ſhapes; ſo that one might as eaſily diveſt them of their ſolidity, as of their figure. This being an immutable and perpetual law, by knowing the figure of the cryſtals, we may underſtand what the texture of the particles ought to be, which can form thoſe cryſtals; and, on the other hand, by knowing the texture of the particles, may be determined the figure of the cryſtals. Woodward.

2. The maſs formed by congelation or concretion.

All animal metallick and mineral cryſtallizations were effected in the water, which muſt bound the particles, whereof each conſiſts, out from amongſt the maſs of the fluid. Woodward's Nat. Hiſt.

To CRY'STALLIZE. v. a. [from cryſtal.] To cauſe to congeal or concrete in cryſtals.

If you diſſolve copper in aqua fortis, or ſpirit of nitre, you may, by cryſtallizing the ſolution, obtain a goodly blue. Boyle.

To CRY'STALLIZE. v. n. To coagulate, congeal, concrete, or ſhoot into cryſtals.

Recent urine will cryſtallize by inſpiſſation, and afford a ſalt neither acid nor alkaline. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

CUB. n. ſ. [of uncertain etymology.]

1. The young of a beaſt; generally of a bear or fox.

I would outdare the ſternneſt eye that look,
Pluck the young ſucking cubs from the ſhe-bear. Shakſpeare.

This night, wherein the cub-drawn bear would couch,
The lion, and the belly-pinched wolf,
Keep their fur dry. Shakſpeare's King Lear.

In the eagle's deſtroying one fox's cub, theſe poems executed with oppreſſion. L'Eſtrange.

2. The young of a whale, perhaps of any viviparous fiſh.

Two mighty whales, which ſwelling ſeas had toſſ,
One as a mountain vaſt, and with her came
A cub, not much inferior to his dame. Waller.

3. In reproach or contempt, a young boy or girl.

O thou diſſembling cub! what wilt thou be,
When time hath ſow'd a grizzle on thy caſe?
Or will not elſe thy craft ſo quickly grow,
That thine own trip ſhall be thine overthrow? Shakſpeare.

O moſt comical ſight! a country ſquire, with the equipage of a wife and two daughters, came to Mr. Snipwel's ſhop laſt night; but, ſuch two unlicked cubs! Congreve.

To CUB. v. a. [from the noun.] To bring forth: uſed of beaſts, or of a woman in contempt.

Cubb'd in a cabbin, on a mattreſs laid,
On a brown gorge with louſy ſwabbers fed;
Dead wine, that ſtinks of the Borrachi, ſup
From a foul jack, or greaſy maple cup. Dryden's Perſius.

CUBA'TION. n. ſ. [cubatio, Latin.] The act of lying down. Dict.

CU'BATORY. adj. [from cubo, Lat.] Recumbent. Dict.

CU'BATURE. n. ſ. [from cube.] The finding exactly the ſolid content of any propoſed body. Harris.

CUBE. n. ſ. [from κύβος, a die.]

1. [In geometry.] A regular ſolid body, conſiſting of ſix ſquare and equal faces or ſides, and the angles all right, and therefore equal. Chambers.

2. [In arithmetick.] See CUBICK Number.

All the maſter planets move about the ſun at ſeveral diſtances, as their common center, and with different velocities. This common law being obſerved in all of them, that the ſquares of the times of the revolutions are proportional to the cubes of their diſtances. Grew's Coſmologia.

CUBE Root. } n. ſ. The origin of a
CU'BICK Root. } cubick number; or that number, by whoſe multiplication into itſelf, and again into the product, any given number is formed: thus two is the cube-root of eight. Chambers.

CU'BEB. n. ſ. A ſmall dried fruit reſembling pepper, but ſomewhat longer, of a greyiſh brown colour on the ſurface. It has an aromatick ſmell, and is acrid to the taſte. Cubebs are brought from Java. Hill.

Aromatick, as cubebs, cinnamon, and nutmeg, are commonly put into crude poor wines, to give them more lively ſpirits. Floyer on the Humours.

CU'BICAL. } adj. [from cube.]
CU'BICK. }

1. Having the form or properties of a cube.

A cloſe veſſel, containing ten cubical feet of air, will not ſuffer a wax candle of an ounce to burn in it above an hour before it be ſuffocated. Wilkins's Math. Mag.

It is above a hundred to one, againſt any particular throw, that you do not caſt any given face with two ſix dice; becauſe there are thirty ſeveral combinations of the ſix faces of four dice. Bentley's Sermons.

2. It is applied to numbers.

The number of four, multiplied into itſelf, produceth the ſquare number of ſixteen; and that again multiplied by four, produceth the cubick number of ſixty-four. If we ſhould ſuppoſe a matter actually infinite, there muſt be infinite roots, and ſquare and cubick numbers, yea, of neceſſity, the root is but the fourth part of the ſquare, and the ſixteenth part of the cubick number. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

The number of ten hath been as highly extolled, as containing even, odd, long and plain, ſhadiſh and cubical numbers. Brown's Vulgar Err.

CU'BICALNESS. n. ſ. [from cubical.] The ſtate or quality of being cubical.

CUBI'CULARY. adj. [cubiculum, Latin.] Fitted for the poſture of lying down.

Cuſtom, by degrees, changed their cubicullary beds into diſcumbency, and introduced a faſhion to go from the baths unto theſe. Brown's Vulg. Err.

CU'BIFORM. adj. [from cube and form.] Of the ſhape of a cube.

CU'BIT. n. ſ. [from cubitus, Latin.] A meaſure in uſe among the ancients; which was originally the diſtance from the elbow, bending inwards, to the extremity of the middle finger. This meaſure is the fourth part of a well-proportioned man's ſtature. Some fix the Hebrew cubit at twenty inches and a half, Paris meaſure; and others at eighteen. Calmet.

From the tip of the elbow to the end of the long finger, is half a yard, and a quarter of the ſtature, and makes a cubit, the firſt meaſure we read of, the ark of Noah being framed and meaſured by cubits. Holder on Time.

Meaſur'd by cubits, length, and breadth, and height. Milton.

The Jews uſed two ſorts of cubits; the ſacred, and the profane or common one. Arbuthnot on Meaſures.

When on the goddeſs firſt I caſt my ſight,
Scarce ſeem'd her ſtature of a cubit height. Pope.

CU'BITAL. adj. [cubitalis, Latin.] Containing only the length of a cubit.

The watchmen of Tyre might well be called pygmies, the towers of that city being ſo high, that unto men below they appeared in a cubital ſtature. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

CU'CKINGSTOOL n. ſ. An engine invented for the puniſhment of ſcolds and unquiet women, which, in ancient times, was called tumbrel. Cowell.

Thoſe mounted on a chair-curule,
Which moderns call a cucking-ſtool,
March proudly to the river's ſide. Hudibras.

CU'CKOLD. n. ſ. [cocu, Fr. from cuckoo.] One that is married to an adultereſs; one whoſe wife is falſe to his bed.

But for all the whole world; why, who would not make her huſband a cuckold, to make him a monarch? I ſhould venture purgatory for't. Shakeſpeare's Othello.

There have been,
Or I am much deceiv'd, cuckolds ere now;
And many a man there is, ev'n at this preſent,
Now while I ſpeak this, holds his wife by th' arm,
That little thinks ſhe has been ſluic'd in 's abſence. Shakeſpeare.

For though the law makes null th' adulterer's deed
Of lands to her, the cuckold may ſucceed. Dryden's Juvenal.

Ever ſince the reign of king Charles II. the aldermen is made a cuckold, the deluded virgin is debauched, and adultery and fornication are committed behind the ſcenes. Swift.

To CU'CKOLD. v. a.

1. To corrupt a man's wife; to bring upon a man the reproach of having an adulterous wife; to rob a man of his wife's fidelity.

If thou canſt cuckold him, thou do'ſt thyſelf a pleaſure, and me a ſcorn. Shakeſpeare's Othello.

2. To wrong a huſband by unchaſtity.

Buy ſtuff not thy wife abroad to roam,
But in thine ſtreets with amazonian pace;
For that is to cuckold thee before thy face. Dryden's Juvenal.

CU'CKOLDLY. adj. [from cuckold.] Having the qualities of a cuckold; poor; mean; cowardly; ſneaking.

Mean cuckoldly knave, I know him not: yet I ſhould ſhame him to call him poor; they ſay the jealous wittolly knave hath maſſes of money. Shakeſpeare's Merry Wives of Windſor.

CU'CKOLDMAKER. n. ſ. [cuckold and make.] One that makes a practice of corrupting wives.

If I ſpeak any thing that may ſtir a head to hit, either young or old, he or ſhe, cuckold, or cuckoldmaker, let me never hope to ſee a chine again. Shakeſpeare's Henry VIII.

One Hernando, cuckoldmaker of this city, contrived to ſteal her away. Dryden's Spaniſh Friar.

CU'CKOLDOM. n. ſ. [from cuckold.]

1. The act of adultery.

She is thinking on nothing but her colonel, and conſpiring cuckoldom againſt me. Dryd. Spaniſh Fr.

2. The ſtate of a cuckold.

It is a true ſaying, that the laſt man of the pariſh that knows of his cuckoldom, is himſelf. Arbuthnot's John Bull.

CU'CKOO. n. ſ. [cuculus, Lat. cuccew, Welſh; cacu, French; cokkock, Dutch.]

1. A bird which appears in the ſpring, and is ſaid to ſuck the eggs of other birds, and lay her own to be hatched in their place: from which practice, it was uſual to alarm a huſband, at the approach of an adulterer, by calling cuckoo; which, by miſtake, was in time applied to the huſband. This bird is remarkable for the uniformity of his note, from which his name in moſt tongues ſeems to have been formed.

Finding Mopſa, like a cuckoo by a nightingale, alone with Pamela, I came in. Sidney.

The merry cuckoo, meſſenger of ſpring,
His trumpet ſhrill hath thrice already ſounded. Spenſer.

The plain ſong cuckoo gray,
Whoſe note full many a man doth mark,
And dares not anſwer, nay. Shakeſpeare.

Take heed, have open eye; for thieves do foot by night,
Take heed ere ſummer comes, or cuckoo birds affright. Shakeſpeare.

I deduce,
From the firſt note the hollow cuckoo ſings,
The ſymphony of ſpring; and touch a theme
Unknown to fame, the paſſion of the grove. Thomſon.

2. It is a name of contempt.

Why, what a raſcal art thou, then, to praiſe him ſo for running! ——A-horſeback, ye cuckoo;——but a-foot, he will not budge a foot. Shakeſpeare's Henry IV.

CU'CKOO-BUD. } n. ſ. [cardaminus, Lat.] The CU'CKOO-FLOWER. } name of a flower.

When daizies pied, and violets blue,
And cuckoo-buds of yellow hue,
Do paint the meadows much bedight. Shakeſpeare.

Nettles, cuckoo-flowers,
Darnel, and all the idle weeds. Shak. King Lear.

CU'CKOO-SPITTLE. n. ſ. [cuckoo and ſpittle.]

Cuckoo-ſpittle, or woodſcare, is that ſpumous dew or exudation, or both, found upon plants, eſpecially about the joints of lavendar and roſemary; obſervable with us about the latter end of May. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

CU'CULLATE. } adj. [cucullatus, hooded,
CU'CULLATED. } Latin.]

CU'CUMBER. n. ſ. [cucumis, Latin.] The name of a plant, and alſo of the fruit of that plant.

It hath a flower conſiſting of one ſingle leaf, bell ſhaped, and expanded toward the top, and cut into many ſegments; of which ſome are male, or barren, having no embryo, but only a large ſtyle in the middle, charged with the farina; others are female, or fruitful, being faſtened to an embryo, which is afterwards changed into a fleſhy fruit, for the moſt part oblong and turbinated, which is divided into three or four cells, incloſing many oblong ſeeds. The ſpecies are, 1. The common cucumber. 2. The white cucumber. 3. The long Turky cucumber. Miller.

How cucumbers along the ſurface creep,
With crooked bodies and with bellies deep. Dryden's Virgil.

CUCURBITA'CEOUS. adj. [from cucurbita, Latin, a gourd.]

Cucurbitaceous plants are thoſe which reſemble a gourd; ſuch as the pumpion and melon. Chambers.

CU'CURBITE. n. ſ. [cucurbita, Latin.] A chymical veſſel, commonly called a body, made of earth or glaſs, in the ſhape of a gourd, and therefore called cucurbite. Quincy.

I have, for curioſity's ſake, diſtilled quickſilver in a cucurbite, fitted with a capacious glaſs head. Boyle on Colours.

Let common yellow ſulphur be put into a cucurbital glaſs, upon which pour the ſtrongeſt aqua fortis. Mortimer.

CUD. n. ſ. [cub, Saxon.] That food which is repoſited in the firſt ſtomach in order to rumination, or to be chewed again.

Many times, when my maſter's cattle came hither to chew their cud in this freſh place, I might ſee the young bull teſtify his love. Sidney.

You range the pathleſs wood,
While on a flow'ry bank he chews the cud. Dryd.

CU'DDEN. } n. ſ. [without etymology.] A
CU'DDY. } clown; a ſtupid ruſtick; a low dolt: a low bad word.

The ſlavering cudden, propp'd upon his ſtaff,
Stood ready gaping with a grinning laugh. Dryden.

To CU'DDLE. v. n. [a low word, I believe, without etymology.] To lie cloſe; to ſquat.

Have you mark'd a partridge quake,
Viewing the tow'ring falcon nigh?
She cuddles low behind the brake,
Nor would ſhe ſtay, nor dares ſhe fly. Prior.

CU'DGEL. n. ſ. [kudſe, Dutch.]

1. A ſtick to ſtrike with, lighter than a club, ſhorter than a pole.

Vine twigs, while they are green, are brittle, yet the wood, dried, is extreme tough; and was uſed by the captains of armies, amongſt the Romans, for their cudgels. Bacon.

Do not provoke the rage of ſtones
And cudgels to thy hide and bones:
Tremble and vaniſh. Hudibras.

The aſs was quickly given to underſtand, with a good cudgel, the difference betwixt the one playfellow and the other. L'Eſtrange.

His ſurly officer ne'er fail'd to crack
His knotty cudgel on his tougher back. Dryden's Juvenal.

This, if well reflected on, would make people more wary in the uſe of the rod and the cudgel. Locke.

The wiſe Cornelius was convinced, that theſe, being polemical arts, could no more be learned alone than fencing or cudgel-playing. Arbuthnot and Pope.

2. To croſs the CUDGELS, is to forbear the conteſt, from the practice of cudgel-players to lay one over the other.

It is much better to give way, than it would be to contend at firſt, and then either to croſs the cudgels, or to be baffled in the concluſion. L'Eſt.

To CU'DGEL. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To beat with a ſtick.

My lord, he ſpeaks moſt vilely of you, like a foul-mouthed man as he is; and ſaid he would cudgel you. Shakeſp. Henry IV.

The aſs courting his maſter, juſt as the ſpaniel had done, inſtead of being ſtroked and made much of, is only rated off and cudgelled for all his court-ship. South.

Three duels he fought, thrice ventur'd his life;
Went home, and was cudgell'd again by his wife.
Swift.

2. To beat in general.

Cudgel thy brains no more about it; for your dull ass will not mend his pace with beating.
Shakespeare's Hamlet.

A good woman happened to pass by, as a company of young fellows were cudgeling a walnut-tree, and asked them what they did that for. L'Estran.

CUDGEL-PROOF. adj. Able to resist a stick.

His doublet was of sturdy buff,
And though not sword, yet cudgel-proof. Hudibras.

CU'DLE. n. s. A small sea-fish.

Of round fish there are britt, sprat, cudles, eels.
Carew.

CU'DWEED. n. s. [from cud and weed.] A plant. Miller.

CUE. n. s. [queue, a tail, French.]

1. The tail or end of any thing; as, the long curl of a wig.

2. The last word of a speech, which the player, who is to answer, catches, and regards as intimation to begin.

Pyramus, you begin: when you have spoken your speech, enter into that brake; and so every one according to his cue.
Shakespeare's Midsummer Night's Dream.

3. A hint; an intimation; a short direction.

What's Hecuba to him, or he to Hecuba,
That he should weep for her? What would he do,
Had he the motive and the cue for passion
That I have? He would drown the stage with tears.
Shakespeare.

Let him know how many servants there are, of both sexes, who expect vails; and give them their cue to attend you two hours, as he leaves the house.
Swift.

4. The part which any man is to play in his turn.

Hold your hands;
Both you of my inclining, and the rest:
Were it my cue to fight, I should have known it
Without a prompter. Shakespeare's Othello.

Neither is Otto here a much more taking gentleman: nothing appears in his cue to move pity, or any way make the audience of his party.
Rymer's Tragedies of the last Age.

5. Humour; temper of mind: a low word.

CUERPO. n. s. [Spanish.] To be in cuerpo, is to be without the upper coat or cloke, so as to discover the true shape of the cuerpo or body.

Without my arms and equipage. Hudibras.

CUFF. n. s. [xuffa, a battle; xuffare, to fight, Ital.]

1. A blow with the fist; a box; a stroke.

The priest let fall the book,
And as he stoop'd again to take it up,
The mad-brain'd bridegroom took him such a cuff,
That down fell priest and book, and book and priest. Shakespeare.

There was no money bid for argument, unless the poet and the player went to cuffs in the question. Shakespeare.

He gave her a cuff on the ear, and she would prick him with her knitting-needle.
Arbuthnot's John Bull.

Their own sects, which now lie dormant, would be soon at cuffs again with each other about power and preferment. Swift.

2. It is used of birds that fight with their talons.

To CUFF. v. n. [from the noun.] To fight; to scuffle.

Clapping farces acted by the court,
While the peers cuff to make the rabble sport.
Dryden's Juvenal.

To CUFF. v. a.

1. To strike with the fist.

I'll after him again, and beat him.——
——Do, cuff him soundly; but never draw thy sword. Shakespeare.

Were not you, my friend, abused, and cuffed, and kicked? Congreve's Old Bachelor.

2. To strike with the talons.

Those lazy owls, who, perch'd near fortune's top,
Sit only watchful with their heavy wings
To cuff down new-fledg'd virtues, that would rise
To nobler heights, and make the grove harmonious. Otway.

The dastard crow, that to the wood made wing,
With her loud kaws her craven kind does bring,
Who, safe in numbers, cuff the noble bird. Dryden.

They with their quills did all the hurt they cou'd,
And cuff'd the tender chickens from their food.
Dryden.

3. To strike with the wings. This seems improper.

Hov'ring about the coast, they make their moan,
And cuff the cliffs with pinions not their own.
Dryden's Æneid.

CUFF. n. s. [coeffe, French.] Part of the sleeve.

He railed at fops; and, instead of the common fashion, he would visit his mistress in a morning gown, band, short cuffs, and a peaked beard.
Arbuthnot.

CUI'NAGE. n. s. The making up of twine into such forms, as it is commonly framed into for carriage to other places.
Cowell.

CUI'RASS. n. s. [cuiraſſe, Fr. from cuir, leather; coraccio, Ital.] A breastplate.

The lance pursued the voice without delay,
And pierc'd his cuirass, with such fury sent,
And sign'd his bosom with a purple dint. Dryden.

CUIRA'SSIER. n. s. [from cuirass.] A man at arms; a soldier in armour.

The field, all iron, cast a gleaming brown,
Nor wanted clouds of foot, nor on each horn
Cuirassiers, all in steel, for standing fight.
Milton.

The picture of St. George, wherein he is described like a cuirassier, or horseman completely armed, is rather a symbolical image than any proper figure. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

CUISH. n. s. [cuiſſe, French.] The armour that covers the thighs.

I saw young Harry, with his beaver on,
His cuishes on his thighs, gallantly arm'd,
Rise from the ground like a feather'd Mercury.
Shakespeare's Henry IV.

The crosset some, and some the cuishes mould,
With silver plated, and with ductile gold.
Dryden's Æneid.

But what had our author to wound Æneas with at so critical a time? And how came the cuishes to be worse tempered than the rest of his armour?
Dryden.

CU'LDEES. n. s. [culdei, Lat.] Monks in Scotland.

CU'LERAGE. n. s. The same plant with ARSE-SMART. Ainsworth.

CU'LINARY. adj. [culina, Latin.] Relating to the kitchen; relating to the art of cookery.

Great weight may condense those vapours and exhalations, as soon as they shall at any time begin to ascend from the sun, and make them presently fall back again into him, and by that action increase his heat; much after the manner that, in our earth, the air increases the heat of a culinary fire. Newton.

To those who, by reason of their northern exposition, will be still forced to be at the expence of culinary fires, it will reduce the price of [illegible] manufacture. Arbuthnot.

To CULL. v. a. [cueillir, French.] To select from others; to pick out of many.

The best of every thing they had being culled out for themselves, if there were in their flocks any poor diseased thing not worth the keeping, that thought it good enough for the altar of God.
Hooker.

Our engines shall be bent
Against the brows of this resisting town:
Call for our chiefest men of discipline,
To cull the plots of best advantage. Shak. K. John.

Like the bee, culling from every flower,
Our thighs are packt with wax, our mouths with honey. Shakespeare.

I do remember an apothecary
In tatter'd weeds, with overwhelming brows,
Culling of simples. Shakespeare's Romeo and Juliet.

Then in a moment fortune shall cull forth,
Out of one side, her happy minion. Shak. K. John.

The choicest of the British, the Roman, Saxon, and Norman laws, being culled, as it were, the grand charter was extracted.
Howel's Parley of Beasts.

When false flow'rs of rhetrick thou would cull,
Truest nature, do not labour to be dull. Dryden.

From his herd he culls,
For slaughter, four the fairest of his bulls.
Dryden's Æneid.

When the current pieces of the same denomination are of different weights, then the trader in money cull out the heavier, and melt them down with profit.

With humble duty, and officious haste,
I'll cull the farthest mead for thy repast.

The various off'rings of the world appear
From each she nicely culls with curious toil,
And decks the goddess with the glitt'ring spoil.

CU'LLER. n. s. [from cull.] One who picks or chooses.

CU'LLION. n. s. [coglione, a fool, Ital. perhaps from scullion. It seems to import meanness rather than folly.] A scoundrel; a mean wretch.

Such a one as leaves a gentleman,
And makes a god of such a cullion.
Shakespeare's Taming of the Shrew.

Up to the breach, you dogs; avaunt, you cullions.
Shakespeare.

CU'LLIONLY. adj. [from cullion.] Having the qualities of a cullion; mean; base.

I'll make a sop o' th' moonshine of you; you whoreson, cullionly, barber-monger, draw.
Shakespeare's King Lear.

CU'LLUMBINE. n. s. [more properly COLUMBINE.] The flowers of the plant are beautifully variegated with blue, purple, red, and white.

Her goodly bosom, like a strawberry bed,
Her neck, like to a bunch of cullumbines.

CU'LLY. n. s. [coglione, Ital. a fool.] A man deceived or imposed upon; as by sharpers, or a strumpet.

Why should you, whilst another wits
Are furnish'd with all perquisites,
B' allow'd to put all tricks upon
Our cully sex, and we use none?
Yet the sly gallus may their baffling scorn
They purchase but sophisticated wares. Dryden.

He takes it in mighty dudgeon, because I begg'd him make me over by deed as his lawful cully.

To CU'LLY. v. a. [from the noun.] To befool; to cheat; to trick; to delude; to impose upon.

CULMI'FEROUS. adj. [culmus and fero, Latin.]

Culmiferous plants are such as have a smooth jointed stalk, and usually hollow; and at each joint the stalk is wrapped about with single, narrow, long, sharp-pointed leaves, and their seeds are contained in chaffy husks. Quincy.

There are also several sorts of grasses, both of the Cyprus and culmiferous kinds; some with shoulder, others with narrower leaves.
Woodward on Fossils.

The properest food of the vegetable kingdom is taken from the farinaceous or mealy seeds of some culmiferous plants; as oats, barley, wheat, rice, rye, maize, panic, millet. Arbuthnot.

To CU'LMINATE. v. n. [culmen, Lat.] To be vertical; to be in the meridian.

Far and wide his eye commands:
For sight no obstacle found here, or shade,
But all sunshine; as when his beams at noon
Culminate from th' equator. Milton's Paradise Lost.

CULMINA'TION. n. s. [from culminate.] The transit of a planet through the meridian.

CU'LPABI'LITY. n. s. [from culpable.] Blameableness.

Guilty: with of.

These being perhaps culpable of this crime, or favourers of their friends. Spenser's State of Irel.

Blameable; blameworthy.

The wisdom of God setteth before us in Scripture so many admirable patterns of virtues, and no one of them without somewhat noted wherein they were culpable; to the end that to Him alone it might always be acknowledged, Thou only art holy. Thou only art just. Hooker.

All such ignorance is voluntary, and therefore culpable; forasmuch as it was in every man's power to have prevented it. South.

CU'LPABLENESS. n. s. [from culpable.] Blame; guilt.

CU'LPABLY. adv. [from culpable] Blameably; criminally.

If we perform this duty pitifully and culpably, it is not to be expected we should command soldiers. Spenser.

CU'LPRIT. n. s. [About this word there is great dispute. It is used by the judge at criminal trials, who, when the prisoner declares himself not guilty, and puts himself upon his trial, answers, Culprit, God send thee a good deliverance. It is likely that it is a corruption of Qu'il paroit, may it so appear; the wish of the judge being that the prisoner may be found innocent.] A man arraigned before his judge.

The knight appear'd, and strunce they proclaim;
Then first the culprit a fault did to his name;
And, after forms of law, was bid reply
To name the thing that woman most desir'd. Dryd.

An author is in the condition of a culprit; the publick are his judges: by allowing too much, and good-breeding too far, he may invite his own cause; and, by pleading and asserting too boldly, he may displease the court. Prior's Preface to Solomon.

CU'LTER. n. s. [culter, Latin.] The iron of the plough perpendicular to the share. It is commonly written coulter.

Ill fallows lies
The darnel, hemlock, and rank fumitory,

That should deracinate such savagery.
Shakespeare's Henry V.

To CU'LTIVATE. v. a. [cultiver, Fr.]

1. To forward or improve the product of the earth by manuring, industry.

Those excellent seeds implanted in your birth, will, if cultivated, be most flourishing in production; and, as the soil is good, and no cost nor care wanting to improve it, we must entertain hopes of the richest harvest. Felton on the Classicks.

2. To improve; to meliorate.

Were we but less indulgent to our faults,
And patience had to cultivate our thoughts,
Our muse would flourish. Waller.

To make man mild and sociable to man,
To cultivate the wild licentious savage
With wisdom, discipline, and liberal arts,
Th' embellishments of life. Addison's Cato.

CULTIVA'TION. n. s. [from cultivate.]

1. The art or practice of improving soils, and forwarding or meliorating vegetables.

2. Improvement in general; promotion; melioration.

An innate light discovers the common notions of good and evil, which, by cultivation and improvement, may be advanced to higher and brighter discoveries. South.

A foundation of good sense, and a cultivation of learning, are required to give a seasoning to recruitment, and make us taste the blessing. Dryden.

CULTIVA'TOR. n. s. [from cultivate.] One who improves, promotes, or meliorates; or endeavours to forward any vegetable product, or any thing else capable of improvement.

It has been lately complained of, by some cultivators of clover grass, that from a great quantity of the seed not any grass springs up. Boyle.

CU'LTURE. n. s. [cultura, Latin.]

1. The act of cultivation; the act of tilling the ground; tillage.

Give us seed unto our heart, and culture to our understanding, that there may come fruit of it.
2 Esdras, viii. 6.

These three last were lower than the ordinary wheat of itself, and the culture did rather retard than advance. Bacon.

The plough was not invented till after the deluge; the earth requiring little or no care of culture but yielding its increase freely, and without labour and toil. Woodward.

Where grows it?—Where grows it not? If vain our toil,
We ought to blame the culture, not the soil.
Fix'd to no spot is happiness sincere. Pope.

They rose as we return'd in the fair;
Then to the culture of the willing plain. Thomson.

2. Art of improvement and melioration.

One might wear any passion out of a family by culture, as fashionable gardeners blot a colour out of a tulip that has its beauty. Tatler.

To CU'LTURE. v. a. [from the noun.] To cultivate; to manure; to till. It is used by Thomson, but without authority.

CU'LVER. n. s. [columba, Lat. culfne, Sax.] A pigeon. An old word.

Wilkins's Math. Magick.

Here a well polish'd mall gives us the joy
To see our prince his matchless force employ:
No sooner has he touch'd the flying ball,
But 'tis already more than half the mall;
And such a fury from his arm 't has got,
As from a smoaking culverin 'twere shot. Waller.

CU'LVERKEY. n. s. A flower.

Looking down the meadows I could see a girl cropping culverkeys and cowslips, to make garlands. Walton's Angler.

3. Unwieldy; unmanageable.

Very long yards are cumbersome, and hard to be readily managed. Newton's Opticks.

CU'MBERSOMELY. adv. [from cumbersome.] In a troublesome manner; in a manner that produces hindrance and vexation.

CU'MBERSOMENESS. n. s. [from cumbersome.] Encumbrance; hindrance; obstruction.

CU'MBRANCE. n. s. [from cumber.] Burden; hindrance; impediment.

Extol not riches then, the toil of fools,
The wise man's cumbrance, if not snare; more apt
To slacken virtue, and abate her edge,
Than prompt her to do aught may merit praise.
Milton.

CU'MBROUS. adj. [from cumber.]

1. Troublesome; vexatious; disturbing.

A cloud

A cloud of cumbrous gnats do him molest,
All striving to infix their feeble stings,
That from their noyance he no where can rest.
Spenser.

2. Oppressive; burdensome.

Henceforth I fly not death, nor would prolong
Life much: Bent rather, how I may be quit,
Fairest and easiest, of this cumbrous charge. Milton.

They tear'd him from the ground,
And from his cumbrous arms his limbs unbound;
Then lanc'd a vein. Dryden.

Post sion's load was grown so great,
He sunk beneath the cumbrous weight. Swift.

2. Elegantly; neatly.

Nor is it the having of wheels and springs, tho' never so curiously wrought, and artificially set, but the winding of them up, that must give motion to the watch. South.

3. Artfully; exactly.

4. Captiously.

CURL. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A ringlet of hair.

She apparelled herself like a page, cutting off her hair, leaving nothing but the short curls to cover that noble head. Sidney.

Just as in act he stood, in clouds enshrin'd,
Her hand she fasten'd on his hair behind,
Then backward by his yellow curls she drew;
To him, and him alone, confess'd in view.
Dryden's Fables.

2. Undulation; wave; sinuosity; flexure.

Thus it happens, if the glass of the prisms be free from veins, and their sides be accurately plain and well polished, without those numberless waves or curls, which usually arise from the sand holes.
Newton's Opticks.

To CURL. v. a. [krollen, Dutch; cyrlian, Sax. krille, Dan.]

1. To turn the hair in ringlets.

What hast thou been?—
—A serving man, proud in heart and mind, that curled my hair, wore gloves in my cap, served the lust of my mistress's heart, and did the act of darkness with her. Shakespeare's King Lear.

2. To writhe; to twist.

3. To dress with curls.

If the first meet the curled Arcite,
He'll make demand of her a kiss. Shakespeare.

O impious realm, and barbarous kind! expos'd
The plagues, and curse with such as those. Id.

To CURSE. v. n. To imprecate; to deny or affirm with imprecation of divine vengeance.
The power above hath wisely forbidden us to speak of those things which the law forbids us to do. Addison.

CURSE. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Malediction; wish of evil to another.
No curse of Egypt, nor divination, nor witchcraft, shall stand against Israel. Id.
I never was forsworn, yet have I heap'd curses on my head, as numerous as the sands, and prodigally paid my soul for every trifle my rage could offer me; and poured out curses with the same lavish hand as prayers. Dryden.

2. Affliction; torment; vexation.
Let us take the prophet at his word, and begin the curse immediately. Addison's Cato.

CURSED. adj. participial adj. [from curse.]

1. Deserving a curse; hateful; detestable; abominable; wicked.
Merciful powers!
Restrain in me the cursed thoughts that nature
Gives way to in repose. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

2. Unholy; unsanctified; blasted by a curse.
Come, lady, while heav'n lends us grace,
Let us fly this cursed place,
Lest we partake of the curse;
With toads which now we trace;
We must not here remain,
Take we our course amain. Milton.

3. Vexatious; troublesome.
The cursed jade shall be no more renew'd;
Be, as becomes a wife, obedient still,
Though grieved, yet subject to her husband's will. Dryden.
One day, I think, in Paradise he found,
Defended with a hedge to other,
Where wounding thorns and cursed burdock grow. Prior.

CURSEDLY. adv. [from cursed.] Miserably; shamefully. A low cant word.
Suppose then a nation that is cursedly wicked or lazy, over-run with too much politeness, and cannot get over one great genius but at the expence of another. Pope.

CURSEDNESS. n. s. [from cursed.] The state of being under a curse.

CURSHIP. n. s. [from cur.] Dogship; meanness, scoundrelship.
How durst he, I say, oppose thy curtship,
Gainst arms, authority, and worship? Hudibras.

CURSITOR. n. s. [Latin.] An officer or clerk belonging to the Chancery, that makes out original writs. They are called clerks of course, in the oath of the clerks of Chancery. Of these there are twenty-four in number, which have certain shires allotted to each of them, into which they make out such original writs as are required. They are a corporation among themselves. Cowell.

Then is the recognition and value, signed with the handwriting of that justice, carried by the cursitor in Chancery for that shire where those lands do lie, and by him a writ of covenant thereupon drawn, and ingrossed in parchment. Bacon.

CURSORARY. adj. [from cursus, Latin.] Cursory; hasty; careless. A word, I believe, only found in the following line.
I have but with a cursorary eye
O'erglanc'd the article. Shakesp. Henry V.

Born both to pain and curse the human race. Prior.
Curst cow have short horn. Proverb.
Upon your threshold knock me, gentlemen,
Let her not hurt me: I was never curst;
I have no gift at all in shrewishness;
I am a right maid, for my cowardice;
Let her not strike me. Shakesp. Mid. Night's Dream.
I'll go seek the bear be gone to the gentlemen, and how much he hath eaten: they are never curst but when they are hungry. Shakesp. Winter's Tale.
Her only fault, and that is fault enough,
Is, that she is intolerably curst,
And shrewd and froward, to that extent
That, were my state far worser than it is,
I would not wed her for a mine of gold. Shakesp.
When I dissuaded him from his intent,
And found him pight to do it with curst speech,
I threaten'd to discover him. Shak. King Lear.
And though his mind
Be never so curst, his tongue is kind. Crashaw.

CURSTNESS. n. s. [from curst.] Peevishness; frowardness; malignity.
Then, with what patience,
Touch with the fiercest point with sacred terms,
Now curstness grow to the matter. Shakespeare's Antony and Cleopatra.
Her mouth she wimbled, her forehead taught to frown,
Her eyes to sparkle fires to love unknown;
Her fallow cheeks her envious mind did shew,
And every feature spoke aloud the curstness of a shrew. Dryden.

CURT. adj. [from curtus, Latin.] Short.

To CURTAIL. v. a [curto, Latin. It was anciently written curtal, which perhaps is more proper; but dogs that had their tails cut being called curtal dogs, the word was vulgarly conceived to mean originally to cut the tail, and was in time written according to that notion.]

1. To cut off; to cut short; to shorten.
I, that am curtail'd of all fair proportion,
Deform'd, unfinish'd, sent before my time
Into this breathing world. Shakesp. Richard III.
Then why should we ourselves abridge,
And curtail our own privilege? Hudibras.
Scribblers send us over their trash in prose and verse, with abominable curtailings and quaint modernisms. Swift.
This general employ, and expence of their time, would as assuredly curtail and retrench the ordinary means of knowledge and erudition, as it would shorten the opportunities of vice. Woodward.
Perhaps this humour of speaking no more than we must, has so miserably curtailed some of our words: and, in familiar writings and conversations, they often lose all but their first syllables. Addison's Spectator.

2. It has of before the thing cut off.
The count allowed the court, that Lucius his antagonist had taken a wrong name, having curtailed it of three letters; for that his name was not Lucius, but Lucius. Addison.

CURTAIL. Dep. n. s. A dog lawed, or mutilated according to the forest laws, whose tail is cut off, and who is therefore hindered in coursing. Perhaps this word may be the original of cur.
I curtail, cur from curtail a witch; and I think it not treason but made of faith, and my troth of steel, the hair to stand me to a curtail dog, and wear me at the wheels. Shakespeare's Comedy of Errours.

CURTAIN. n. s. [cortina, Latin.]

1. A cloth contracted or expanded at pleasure, to admit or exclude the light, to conceal or discover any thing; to shade a bed; to darken a room.

It ſticks cloſe to the ſurface of the true ſkin, to which it is alſo tied by the veſſels which nouriſh it, though they are ſo ſmall as not to be ſeen. When the ſcarf-ſkin is examined with a microſcope, it appears to be made up of ſeveral lays of exceeding ſmall ſcales. Quincy.

In each of the very fingers there are bones and griſtle, and ligaments and membranes, and muſcles and tendons, and nerves and arteries, and veins and ſkin, and cuticle and nail.

Bentley's Sermons.

2. A thin ſkin formed on the ſurface of any liquor.

When any ſaline liquor is evaporated to cuticle, and it ſoon, the laſt concretes in regular figures which more than the particles of the ſalt, before they concreted, floated in the liquor at equal diſtances to look and ſtir. Natural Hiſtory.

CUTI'CULAR. adj. [from cutis, Latin.] Belonging to the ſkin.

CUTH, ſignifies knowledge or ſkill. So Cuthbert is a knowing conqueror; Cuthred, a knowing counſellor; Cuthbert, famous for ſkill. Much of the ſame nature are Sophocles and Sophianus.

Gibſon's Camden.

CU'TLASS. n. ſ. [coutelas, French. This word is written ſometimes cutlace, ſometimes cuttleax; in Shakeſpeare, curtleaxe; and in Pope, cutlaſh.] A broad cutting ſword: the word is much in uſe among the ſeamen.

Were't not better
That I did ſuit me all points like a man?
A galiant curtleaxe upon my thigh,
A boar-ſpear in my hand. Shakeſp. As you like it.

To the lodgments of his herd he run,
Where the fat porkers ſlept beneath the ſun;
Of two his cutlaſh launch'd the ſpouting blood,
Theſe quarter'd, ſing'd, and fix'd on forks of wood.

Pope.

CU'TLER. n. ſ. [coutelier, French.] One who makes or ſells knives.

A paultry ring
That ſhe did give, whoſe poeſy was
For all the world like cutlers poetry
Upon a knife; love me, and leave me not. Shak.

In a bye cutler's ſhop he bought a tenpenny knife: ſo cheap was the inſtrument of this great attempt. Wotton.

He choſe no other inſtrument than an ordinary knife, which he bought at a common cutler's.

Clarendon.

CU'TPURSE. n. ſ. [cut and purſe.] One who ſteals by the method of cutting purſes: a common practice when men wore their purſes at their girdles, as was once the cuſtom. A thief; a robber.

To have an open ear, a quick eye, and a nimble hand, is neceſſary for a cutpurſe.

Shakeſpeare's Winter's Tale.

A vice of kings,
A cutpurſe of the empire and the rule,
That from a ſhelf the precious diadem ſtole,
And put it in his pocket. Shakeſpeare's Hamlet.

Was there no felony, no blood,
Cutpurſe, nor burglary abroad? Hudibras.

If we could imagine a whole nation to be cutpurſes and robbers, would there then be kept that buſineſs and equity in ſuch a monſtrous den of thieves? Bentley's Sermons.

CU'TTER. n. ſ. [from cut.]

1. An agent or inſtrument that cuts any thing.

2. A nimble boat that cuts the water.

3. [Inciſores.] The teeth that cut the meat.

The molares, or grinders, are behind, neareſt the centre of motion, becauſe there is greater ſtrength or force required to chew the meat than to bite a piece; and the cutters before, that they may be ready to cut off a morſel from any ſort of food, to be tranſmitted to the grinders.

Ray, on the Creation.

4. An officer in the Exchequer that provides wood for the tallies, and cuts the ſum paid upon them; and then caſts the ſame into the court to be written upon. Cowell.

CU'T-THROAT. n. ſ. [cut and throat.] A ruffian; a murderer; a butcher of men; an aſſaſſin.

Will you then ſuffer theſe robbers, cut-throats, baſe people, gathered out of all the corners of Chriſtendom, to waſte your countries, ſpoil your cities, murder your people, and trouble all your ſeas? Knolles.

Perhaps the cut-throat may rather take his copy from the Parriſian maſſacre, one of the horrideſt inſtances of barbarous inhumanity that ever was known. South.

The ruffian robbers by no juſtice awe'd,
And unpaid cut-throat ſoldiers, are abroad;
Thoſe venal ſouls, who, hardened in each ill,
To ſave complaints and proſecution, kill.

Dryden's Juvenal.

CU'T-THROAT. adj. Cruel; inhuman; barbarous.

If to take above fifty in the hundred be extremity, this in truth can be none other than cut-throat and abominable dealing.

Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

CU'TTING. n. ſ. [from cut.] A piece cut off; a chop.

The burning of the cuttings of vines, and caſting them upon land, doth much good.

Bacon's Natural Hiſtory.

Many are propagated above ground by ſlips or cuttings. Ray.

CUTTLE. n. f. [sepia.] A fish, which when he is pursued by a fish of prey, throws out a black liquor, by which he darkens the water and escapes.

It is somewhat strange, that the blood of all birds, and beasts, and fishes, should be of a red colour, and only the blood of the cuttle should be as black as ink. Bacon.

He that uses many words for the explaining any subject, doth, like the cuttle fish, hide himself for the most part in his own ink. Ray on the Creation.

CU'TTLE. n. f. [from cuttle.] A foul-mouthed fellow; a fellow who blackens the character of others. Hanmer.

Away, you cutting rascal; you filthy bung, away: by this hand I'll thrust my knife in your mould, chap, if you play the saucy cuttle with me. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

CY'CLE. n. f. [cyclus, Latin; κύκλος.]

1. A circle.
2. A round of time; a space in which the same revolutions begin again; a periodical space of time.

We do more commonly use these words, to assign a lesser space a cycle, and a greater by the name of period, and you may not improperly call the beginning of a large period the epocha thereof. Holder on Time.

3. A method, or account of a method, continued till the same course begins again.

We thought we should not attempt an unacceptable work, in which we endeavoured to present our gardener with a complete cycle of what is requisite to be done throughout every month of the year. Evelyn's Kalendar.

4. Imaginary orbs; a circle in the heavens.

How hold, and full, and wide, compose
The five apparent orbs, or cycle of the sphere
With what mixt motion she conducts, and takes
Each planet by his course, and how returns
Cycle and epicycle, orb in orb! Milton.

CY'CLOID. n. f. [from κυκλοειδης, of κυκλος, and ειδος, shape.] A geometrical curve, of which the genesis may be conceived by imagining a nail in the circumference of a wheel: the line which the nail describes in the air, while the wheel revolves in a right line, is the cycloid.

CYCLO'IDAL. adj. [from cycloid.] Relating to a cycloid; as the cycloidal space, is the space contained between the cycloid and its substance. Chambers.

CY'GNET. n. f. [from cycnus, Latin.] A young swan.

I am the cygnet to this pale faint swan,
Who chaunts a doleful hymn to his own death.
Shakespeare's K. John.

So doth the swan her downy cygnets save,
Keeping them prisoners underneath her wings.
Shakespeare's Henry VI.

Cygnets, from grey, turn white.
Bacon's Natural History.

Young cygnets are good meat, if fatted with oats; but, fed with weeds, they taste filthy.
Mortimer's Husbandry.

CY'LINDER. n. f. [κύλινδρος.] A body having two flat surfaces and one circular. The quantity of water which every revolution does carry, according to any inclination of the cylinder, may be easily found. Wilkins.

The square will make you ready for all manner of compartments, bases, pedestals, plots, and buildings; your cylinder, for vaulted turrets, and round buildings. Peacham.

CYLI'NDRICAL. } adj. [from cylinder.]
CYLI'NDRICK. } Partaking of the nature of a cylinder; having the form of a cylinder.

Minera ferri stalactitia, when several of the cylindrick striæ are contiguous, and grow together into one sheaf, is called brushiron ore.
Woodward's Natural History.

Obstructions must be most incident to such parts of the body where the circulation and the elastick fibres are both smallest, and those glands, which are the extremities of arteries formed into cylindrical canals. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

CYMA'R. n. f. [properly written simar.] A slight covering; a scarf.

Her comely limbs compos'd with decent care,
Her body shaded with a slight cymar;
Her bosom to the view was only bare. Dryden.

CY'MATIUM. n. f. [Lat. from κυμάτιον, a little wave.] A member of architecture, whereof one half is convex, and the other concave. There are two sorts, of which one is hollow below, as the other is above. Harris.

CY'MBAL. n. f. [cymbalum, Lat.] A musical instrument.

The trumpets, sackbuts, psalteries and fifes,
Tabors and cymbals, and the shouting Romans,
Make the sun dance. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

If mirth should fail, I'll busy her with cares,
Silence her clamorous voice with louder wars;
Trumpets and drums shall fright her from the throne,
A sounding cymbal aid the lab'ring moon.
Dryden's Aurengzebe.

CYNA'NTHROPY. n. f. [κυων ανθρωπος, and ανθρωπος.] A species of madness in which men have the qualities of dogs.

CYNARCTO'MACHY. [κυων, αρκτος, μαχη.] A word coined by Butler, to denote bear-baiting with a dog.

That some occult design doth lie
In bloody cynarctomachy,
Is plain enough to him that knows
How fiunts lead brothers by the nose. Hudibras.

CYNEGE'TICKS. n. f. [κυνηγετικα.] The art of hunting; the art of training and hunting with dogs.

There are extant, in Greek, four books of *cynegetick*s, or venation. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

CY'NICAL. } adj. [κυνικος.] Having the CY'NICK. } qualities of a dog; currish; brutal; snarling; satirical.

He doth believe that some new-fangled wit (it is his cynical phrase) will some time or other find out his art. Wilkins.

CY'NICK. n. f. [κυνικος.] A philosopher of the snarling or currish sort; a follower of Diogenes; a rude man; a snarler; a misanthrope.

How finely doth this cynick rhime!—
Get you hence, sirrah; saucy fellow, hence. Shak.

Without these precautions the man degenerates into a cynick, the woman into a roquette; the man grows sullen and morose, the woman impertinent and fantastical. Addison.

CY'NOSURE. n. f. [from κυνος ουρα.] The star near the north pole, by which sailors steer.

Towers and battlements it sees
Bosom'd high in tufted trees,
Where perhaps some beauty lies,
The cynosure of neighbouring eyes. Milton.

CY'ON. See CION.

Gather cyons for grafts before the buds sprout.
Evelyn.

CY'PRESS-TREE. n. f. [cupressus, Latin.]

1. The cypress is a tall straight tree, produced with great difficulty. Its fruit is of no use; its leaves are bitter, and the very smell and shade of it are dangerous. Hence the Romans looked upon it to be a fatal tree, and made use of it at funerals, and in mournful ceremonies. The cypress-tree is always green, and never either rots or is worm-eaten. Calmet.

In ivory coffers I have stuff'd my crowns;
In cypress chests my arras counterpanes.
Shakespeare.

He taketh the cypress and the oak, which he strengtheneth for himself among the trees of the forest. Is. xliv. 14.

Poplars and alders ever quivering play'd,
And nodding cypress form'd a fragrant shade.
Pope's Odyssey.

2. Being anciently used in funerals, it is the emblem of mourning.

Poison be their drink,
Their sweetest shade a grove of cypress trees.
Shakespeare's Henry VI.

CY'PRUS. n. f. [I suppose from the place where it was made; or corruptly from cypress, as being used in mourning.] A thin transparent black stuff.

Imwn as white as driven snow,
Cyprus black as e'er was crow.
Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

A cyprus, not a bosom,
Hides my poor heart! Shakespeare.

CYST. } n. f. [κυστις.] A bag containing some morbid matter.
CY'STIS. }

In taking it out, the cystis broke, and shewed itself by its matter to be a melicetis.
Wiseman's Surgery.

There may be a consumption, with a purulent spitting, when the vomica is contained in a cyst or bag; upon the breaking of which the patient is commonly suffocated. Arbuthnot on Diet.

CY'STICK. adj. [from cyst, a bag.] Contained in a bag.

The bile is of two sorts: the cystick, or that contained in the gall-bladder, a sort of repository for the gall; or the hepatick, or what flows immediately from the liver. Arbuthnot.

CYSTO'TOMY. n. f. [κυστις and τεμνω.] The act or practice of opening incysted tumours, or cutting the bag in which any morbid matter is contained.

Pope.

This will find thee picking of daiſies, or ſmelling to a lock of hay. Addiſon.

Fair-handed Spring unboſoms every grace;
The daiſy, primroſe, violet. Thomſon.

DALE. n. ſ. [dalei, Gothick; dal, Dutch and German.] A low place between hills; a vale; a valley.

Long toſt with ſtorms, and beat with bitter winds,
High over hills, and low adown the dale,
She wand'red many a wood, and meaſur'd many a vale. Fairy Queen.

Before the downfall of the fairy ſtate,
This dale, a pleaſing region, not unbleſt,
This dale poſſeſs'd they, and had ſtill poſſeſs'd.
Tickell.

He ſteals along the lonely dale. Thomſ. Spring.

DA'LLIANCE. n. ſ. [from dally.]

1. Interchange of careſſes; acts of fondneſs.

Look thou be true: do not give dalliance
Too much the rein: the ſtrongeſt oaths are ſtraw
To th' fire i' th' blood. Shakeſpeare's Tempeſt.
Nor gentle purpoſe, nor endearing ſmiles,
Wanted; nor youthful dalliance, as beſeems
Fair couple link'd in happy nuptial league,
Alone as they. Milton.
I'll head my people;
Then think of dalliance when the danger's o'er:
My warlike ſpirits work now another way,
And my ſoul 's turn'd to trumpets. Dryden.

2. Conjugal converſation.

The giant, ſelf-diſmayed with the ſound,
Where he with his Dueſſa dalliance found,
In haſte came ruſhing forth from inner bow'r.
Fairy Queen.
That bower, not myſtick, where the ſapient king
Held dalliance with his fair Egyptian ſpouſe.
Milton.
Thou claim'ſt me for thy ſire,
And my fair ſon here ſhow'ſt me, the dear pledge
Of dalliance had with thee in heav'n. Milton.

3. Delay; procraſtination.

Both wind and tide ſtay for this gentleman;
And I, to blame, have held him here too long.—
—Good lord, you uſe this dalliance to excuſe
Your breach of promiſe. Shakeſpeare.

DA'LLIER. n. ſ. [from dally.] A trifler; a fondler.

The daily dalliers with pleaſant words, with ſmiling countenances, and with wagers purpoſed to be loſt before they were purpoſed to be made. Aſcham.

DA'LLOP. n. ſ. [of unknown etymology.] A tuft, or clump: not in uſe.

Of barley the fineſt and greeneſt ye find,
Leave ſtanding in dallops till time ye do bind.
Tuſſer.

To DA'LLY. v. n. [dollen, Dutch, to trifle.]

1. To trifle; to play the fool; to amuſe one's ſelf with idle play; to loſe time in trifles; to procraſtinate idly.

Take up thy maſter:
If thou ſhouldſt dally half an hour, his life,
With thine, and all that offer to defend him,
Stand in aſſured loſs. Shakeſpeare's King Lear.
He left his car, and laying hold
Upon his arms, with courage bold
Cried out, 'tis now no time to dally,
The enemy begin to rally. Hudibras.

We have trifled too long already: it is madneſs to dally any longer, when our ſouls are at ſtake. Calamy's Sermons.

One hundred thouſand pounds muſt be raiſed; for there is no dallying with hunger. Swift.

2. To exchange careſſes; to play the wanton; to fondle.

He is not lolling on a lewd love bed,
But on his knees at meditation;
Not dallying with a brace of courtezans,
But meditating with two deep divines. Shakeſpeare.

3. To ſport; to play; to frolick.

She her airie buildeth in the cedar's top,
And dallies with the wind, and ſcorns the ſun.
Shakeſpeare.

4. To delay.

They that would not be reformed by that correction, wherein he dallied with them, ſhall feel a judgment worthy of God. Wiſdom, xii. 26.

To DA'LLY. v. a. To put off; to delay; to amuſe till a proper opportunity.

He ſet down to perform ſervice, not by the hazard of one ſet battle, but by dallying off the time with often ſkirmiſhes. Knolles's Hiſtory.

DAM. n. ſ. [from dame, which formerly ſignified mother. Had Nero never been an emperour, ſhulde never his dame have be ſlaine. Chaucer.]

1. The mother: used of beasts, or other animals not human.

The dam runs lowing up and down,
Looking the way her harmless young one went,
And can do nought but wail her darling loss.
Shakespeare.

Mother, says a sick kite, let me have your prayers.—Alas, my child, says the dam, which of the gods shall I go to? L'Estrange.

Birds bring but one morsel of meat at a time, and have not fewer, it may be, than seven or eight young in the nest together, which, at the return of their dam, do all at once, with equal greediness, hold up their heads and gape. Ray.

2. A human mother, in contempt or detestation.

This brat is none of mine;
It is the issue of Polixena:
Hence with it, and, together with the dam,
Commit them to the fire. Shakesp. Winter's Tale.

DAM. n. s. [dam, Dutch.] A mole or bank to confine water.

As when the sea breaks o'er its bounds,
And overflows the level grounds,
Those banks and dams, that like a skreen
Did keep it out, now keep it in. Hudibras.

Not with so fierce a rage the foaming flood
Roars, when he finds his rapid course withstood;
Bears down the dams, with unresisted sway,
And sweeps the cattle and the cots away. Dryden.

Let loose the reins to all your watry store,
Bear down the dams, and open every door. Dryden.

The inside of the dam must be very smooth and straight; and if it is made very sloping on each side, it is the better. Mortimer's Husbandry.

To DAM. v. a. [bemman, ponebemman, Sax. dammen, Dutch.]

1. To confine, or shut up, water by moles or dams.

I'll have the current in this place damm'd up;
And here the smug and silver Trent shall run
In a new channel, fair and evenly. Shak. Hen. VI.

Home I would go,
But that my doors are hateful to my eyes,
Fill'd and damm'd up with gaping creditors,
Watchful as fowlers when their game will spring.
Otway.

Boggy lands are fed by springs, pent by a weight of earth, that dams in the water, and causes it to spread. Mortimer.

'Tis you must drive that trouble from your soul;
As streams, when damm'd, forget their ancient current,
And, wond'ring at their banks, in other channels flow. Smith.

2. It is used by Shakespeare of fire, and by Milton of light.

The more thou damm'st it up, the more it burns.
Shakesp.

Moon! if your influence be quite damm'd up
With black usurping mists, some gentle taper,
Though a rush-candle from the wicker hole
Of some clay habitation, visit us
With thy long levell'd rule of streaming light.
Milton.

DAMAGE. n. s. [damage, French.]

1. Mischief; hurt; detriment.

Gross errours and absurdities many commit for want of a friend to tell them of them, to the great damage both of their fame and fortune. Bacon.

Such as were sent from thence did commonly do more hurt and damage to the English subjects than the Irish enemies, by their continual cess and extortion. Davies.

He repulsed the enemy very much to their damage. Clarendon.

2. Loss; mischief suffered.

His heart exults him in the harm
Already done, to have dispeopled heav'n,
My damage fondly deem'd! Milton.

3. The value of mischief done.

They believed that they were not able, though they should be allowed to keep all they have in Ireland, to pay the damages which had been sustained by the war. Clarendon.

4. Reparation of damage; retribution.

The bishop demanded restitution of the spoils taken by the Scots, or damages for the same. Bacon.

Tell me whether, upon exhibiting the several particulars which I have related to you, I may not sue her for damages in a court of justice. Addison.

5. [In law.] Any hurt or hindrance that a man taketh in his estate. In the common law it particularly signifies a part of what the jurors be to enquire of; for, after verdict given of the principal cause, they are likewise asked their consciences touching costs, which are the charges of suit, and damages, which contain the hindrance which the plaintiff or demandant hath suffered, by means of the wrong done him by the defendant or tenant. Cowell.

When the judge had awarded due damages to a person into whose field a neighbour's oxen had broke, it is reported that he reversed his own sentence, when he heard that the oxen which had done this mischief, were his own. Watts.

To DA'MAGE. v. a. [from the noun.] To mischief; to injure; to impair; to hurt; to harm.

I consider time as an immense ocean, into which many noble authors are entirely swallowed up, many very much shattered and damaged, some quite disjointed and broken into pieces. Addison.

To DA'MAGE. v. n. To take damage, or be damaged.

DA'MAGEABLE, adj. [from damage.]

1. Susceptible of hurt: as, damageable goods.

2. Mischievous; pernicious.

Obscene and immodest talk is offensive to the purity of God, damageable and infectious to the innocence of our neighbours, and most pernicious to ourselves.

DA'MASCENE. n. s. [damascenus, from Damascus.] A small plum; a damson, as it is now spoken.

In April follow the cherry tree in blossom, the damascene and plum trees in blossom, and the white thorn in leaf. Bacon.

In fruits the white commonly is meanest, as in pear plums and damascenes; and the choicest plum are black. Bacon.

DA'MASK. n. s. [damasquin, Fr. damaschino, Ital. from Damascus.]

1. Linen or silk woven in a manner invented at Damascus, by which part, by a various direction of the threads, exhibits flowers or other forms.

Not any weaver which his work doth toast
In diaper, damask, or in lyon. Spenser.

Wipe your shoe, for want of a cloth, with a damask napkin. Swift's Rules to Servants.

2. It is used for red colour in Fairfax, from the damask rose.

And for some doale perplexed was her spirit,
Her damask lips, now chang'd to purest white.
Fairfax.

To DA'MASK. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To form flowers upon stuffs.

2. To variegate; to diversify.

They sat recline
On the soft downy bank, damask'd with flowers.
Milton.

Around him dance the rosy hours,
And damasking the ground with flow'rs,
With ambient sweets perfume the morn. Fenton.

3. To adorn steel-work with figures: practised, I suppose, first at Damascus.

DAMASK-PLUM. See PLUM.

DAMASK-ROSE. n. s. The rose of Damascus; a red rose. See ROSE.

Damask-roses have not been known in England above one hundred years, and now are so common. Bacon.

No gradual bloom is wanting from the bud,
Nor broad carnations, nor gay spotted pinks,
Nor, shower'd from ev'ry bush, the damask rose.
Thomson.

DA'MASKENING. n. s. [from damasquiner, Fr.] The art or act of adorning iron or steel, by making incisions, and filling them up with gold or silver wire: used in enriching the blades of swords, and locks of pistols. Chambers.

DAME. n. s. [dame, French; dama, Spanish.]

1. A lady; the old title of honour to women.

The word dame originally signified a mistress of a family, who was a lady; and it is used still in the English law to signify a lady: but in common use, now-a-days, it represents a farmer's wife, or a mistress of a family of the lower rank in the country. Watts's Logick.

Bless you, fair dame! I am not to you known,
Though in your state of honour I am perfect.
Shakespeare.

Not all these lords do vex me half so much
As that proud dame, the lord protector's wife.
Shakespeare.

Shut your mouth, dame! Shakesp. King Lear.

Sov'reign of creatures, universal dame! Milton.

2. It is still used in poetry for women of rank.

Hic fair'st Fame; a Laurentian dame
His mother: fair Marica was her name. Dryden.

Who would not repeat that blow,
And disrespect sight of such a dame
Buy with the hazard of his fame? Waller.

3. Mistress of a low family.

They killed the poor cock; for, say they, if it were not for his waking our dame, she would not wake us. L'Estrange.

4. Woman in general.

We've willing dames enough, there cannot be
That villainy in you, but with so many
As will be greatness dedicate themselves. Shakesp.

DAMES-VIOLET. n. s. A plant, called also queen's gillyflower. Miller.

To DAMN. v. a. [damno, Latin.]

1. To doom to eternal torments in a future state.

It is most necessary, that the church, by doctrine, and decree, do damn and send to hell for ever those fects and opinions. Bacon.

2. To procure or cause to be eternally condemned.

That which he continues ignorant of, having done the utmost lying in his power that he might not be ignorant of it, shall not damn him.
South's Sermons.

3. To condemn.

His own impartial thought
Will damn, and conscience will record the fault.
Dryden.

4. To hoot or hiss any publick performance; to explode.

They damn themselves, nor will my muse defend
To clap with such who fools and knaves commend.
Dryden.

For the great dons of wit,
Phœbus gives them full privilege alone
To damn all others, and cry up their own. Dryd.

You are so good a critick, that it is the greatest happiness of the modern poets that you do not hear hear their works; and, next, that you are not so arrant a critick as to damn them, like the rest, without hearing. Pope.

DA'MNABLE. adj. [from damn.]

1. Deserving damnation; justly doomed to never-ending punishment.

It gives him occasion of labouring with greater earnestness elsewhere, to entangle unwary minds with the snares of his damnable opinion. Hooker.

He's a creature unprepar'd, unmeet for death;
And to transport him in the mind he is [illegible] Shakesp. Measure for Measure.

As he detests every thought of a damnable nature, so he is far from closing with the new opinion of those who make it no crime. Swift.

2. It is sometimes indecently used in a low and ludicrous sense; odious; pernicious.

O thou damnable fellow! did not I pluck thee by the nose for thy speeches? Shakspeare's Measure for Measure.

DA'MNABLY. adv. [from damnable.]

1. In such a manner as to incur eternal punishment; so as to be excluded from mercy.

We will propose the question, whether those who hold the fundamentals of faith may deny Christ damnably, in respect of those consequences that are drawn from them? South's Sermons.

2. It is indecently used in a ludicrous sense; odiously; hatefully.

The more lovers they have heaped upon them, the more damnably chaste they are thought. Dennis.

DAMNA'TION. n. s. [from damn.] Exclusion from divine mercy; condemnation to eternal punishment.

He that hath been affrighted with the fears of hell, or terrified by reflection how he hath been spared from the brink of damnation, will not be ready to strangle his brother for a trifle.

Taylor's Worthy Communicant.

Now mount the sun,
And meditate damnation with a phrase:
Say you consented not to Sancho's death,
But barely not forbade it. Dryden.

DA'MNATORY. adj. [from damnatorius.] Containing a sentence of condemnation.

DA'MNED. part. adj. [from damn.] Hateful; detestable; abhorred; abominable.

Not to the legions
Of horrid hell can come a devil more damn'd
In evils to top Macbeth. Shakspeare's Macbeth.

Let not the royal bed of Denmark be
A couch for luxury and damned incest.
Shakspeare's Hamlet.

But, oh! what damn'd minutes tells he o'er,
Who doats, yet doubts; suspects, yet strongly loves.
Shakspeare.

Dare not
To brand the spotless virtue of my prince
With ratsbanes of most base and damn'd contrivance. Rowe.

DAMNI'FIC. adj. [from damnify.] Procuring loss; mischievous.

To DA'MNIFY. v. a. [from damnifico, Latin.]

1. To endamage; to injure; to cause loss to any.

He, who has suffered the damage, has a right to demand in his own name, and he alone can remit, satisfaction: the damnified person has the power of appropriating the goods or service of the offender, by right of self-preservation. Locke.

2. To hurt; to impair.

When now he saw himself so freshly rear,
As if late fight had nought him damnified,
He was dismay'd, and 'gan his fate to fear.
Fairy Queen.

DA'MNINGNESS. n. s. [from damning.] Tendency to procure damnation.

He may vow never to return to those sins which he hath had such experience of, for the emptiness and damningness of them, and so think himself a complete penitent. Hammond.

DAMP. adj. [dampe, Dutch.]

1. Moist; inclining to wet; not completely dry; foggy.

She said no more: the trembling Trojans hear,
O'erspread with a damp sweat and holy fear. Dryd.

2. Dejected; sunk; depressed.

All these and more came flocking, but with looks
Downcast and damp: yet such wherein appear'd
Obscure some glimpse of joy. Milton.

DAMP. n. s.

1. Fog; moist air; moisture.

Night; not now, as ere man fell,
Wholesom, and cool, and mild; but with black air
Accompanied, with damps and dreadful gloom.
Milton.

A rift there was, which from the mountain's height
Convey'd a glimmering and malignant light;
A breathing-place to draw the damps away,
A twilight of an intercepted day. Dryden.

2. A noxious vapour exhaled from the earth.

The heat of the sun, in the hotter seasons, penetrating the exterior parts of the earth, excites those mineral exhalations in subterraneous caverns, which are called damps: these seldom happen but in the summer-time; when, the hotter the weather is, the more frequent are the damps. Woodward.

3. Dejection; depression of spirit; cloud of the mind.

Adam, by this from the cold sudden damp
Recovering, and his scatter'd spirits return'd,
To Michael thus his humble words address'd.
Milton.

His name struck every where so great a damp,
As Archimedes through the Roman camp. Rofc.

Even now, while thus I stand blest in thy presence,
A secret damp of grief comes o'er my thoughts.
Addison.

An eternal state he knows and confesses that he has made no provision for, that he is undone for ever: a prospect enough to cast a damp over his sprightliest hours. Rowe.

This commendable resentment against me, strikes a damp upon that spirit in all ranks and corporations of men. Swift.

To DAMP. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To wet; to moisten; to make humid.

2. To depress; to deject; to chill; to dull.

The very loss of one pleasure is enough to damp the relish of another. L'Estrange.

Dread of death hangs over the mere natural man, and, like the hand-writing on the wall, damps all his jollity. Atterbury.

It would be enough to damp their warmth in such pursuits, if they could once reflect, that in such course they will be sure to run upon the very rock they mean to avoid. Swift.

3. To weaken; to abate; to hebetate; to discourage.

A soft body dampeth the sound much more than a hard. Bacon.

4. To hebetate; to abate motion; to discourage; to dull.

Usury dulls and damps all industries, improvements, and new inventions, wherein money would be stirring, if it were not for this clog. Bacon.

Unless an age too late, or cold
Climate, or years, damp my intended wing
Depress'd. Milton.

DA'MPISHNESS. n. s. [from damp.] Tendency to wetness; fogginess; moisture.

It hath been used by some with great success, to make their walls thick; and to put a lay of chalk between the bricks, to take away all dampishness. Bacon.

DA'MPNESS. n. s. [from damp.] Moisture; fogginess.

Nor need they fear the dampness of the sky
Should clog their wings, and hinder them to fly;
'Twas only water thrown, that falls too dry. Dryden.

By stacks they often have very great loss, by the dampness of the ground, which rots and spoils it. Mortimer.

DA'MPY. adj. [from damp.] Dejected; gloomy; sorrowful.

The lords did dispel dampy thoughts, which the remembrance of his uncle might raise, by applying him with exercises and disports. Hayward.

DA'MSEL. n. s. [damoiselle, French.]

1. A young gentlewoman; a young woman of distinction: now only used in verse.

Kneeling, I my servant's smiles implore;
And one mad damsel dares dispute my pow'r. Prior.

2. An attendant of the better rank.

With her train of damsels she was gone
In shady walks, the scorching heat to shun. Dryden.

3. A wench; a country lass.

The clowns are whoremasters, and the damsels with child. Gay.

DA'MSON. n. s. [corruptly from damascene.] A small black plum. See DAMASCENE.

My wife desir'd some damsons,
And made me climb with danger of my life. Shakesp.

DAN. n. s. [from dominus, as now don in Spanish; and donna, Italian, from domina.] The old term of honour for men, as we now say Master. I know not that it was ever used in prose, and imagine it to have been rather of ludicrous import.

Dan Chaucer well of English undefiled. Dryden.

This whimpled, whining, purblind, wayward boy,
This signor Junio's giant dwarf, dan Cupid. Shak.

Dick, if this story pleaseth thee,
Pray thank dan Pope, who told it me.
Prior's Alma.

To DANCE. v. n. [danser, Fr. dancar, Span. as some think from tanza, Arabick, a dance; as Junius, who loves to derive from Greek, thinks, from θοινος.] To move in measure; to move with steps correspondent to the sound of instruments.

What say you to young Mr. Fenton? He capers, he dances, he has eyes of youth, he writes verses. Shakespeare.

To DANCE Attendance. v. n. To wait with suppleness and obsequiousness.

Men are sooner weary to dance attendance at the gates of foreign lords, than to tarry the good leisure of their own magistrates. Raleigh's Essays.

It upbraids you,
To let your father's friend, for three long months,
Thus dance attendance for a word of audience.
Dryden.

To DANCE. v. a. To make to dance; to put into a lively motion.

Thy grandsire lov'd thee well;
Many a time he dane'd thee on his knee. Shakesp.

That I see thee here,
Thou noble thing! more dances my rapt heart,
Than when I first my wedded mistress saw
Bestride my threshold. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

In pestilences, the malignity of the infecting vapour danceth the principal spirits. Bacon.

DANCE. n. s. [from the verb.] A motion of one or many in concert, regulated by musick.

Our dance of custom, round about the oak
Herne the hunter. Shakespeare's M. W. of Windsor.

The honourableſt part of talk is to give the occaſion, and again to moderate and paſs to ſomewhat elſe; for then a man leads the dance. Bacon.

But you perhaps expect a modiſh feaſt,
With am'rous ſongs and wanton dances grac'd. Dryd. n.

DA'NCER. n. ſ. [from dance.] One that practiſes the art of dancing.

Hear Philippi's dancer,
His ſword clean like a dancer, while I ſtrook
The lean and wrinkled Caſſius. Shakſpeare.

Muſicians and dancers take ſome time
With their moſt pleaſing labours; for great uſe
As much as time is to perfect do brings. Denne.

I've ever ſeen ſo far from being a good dancer, that he was no graceful goer. Wotton.

It is a uſual practice for our funambuloes, or dancers on the rope, to attempt ſomewhat like to flying. Wilkins.

He, perfect dancer! climbs the rope,
And balances your fear and hope. Prior.

Nature, I thought, perform'd two main a part,
Forming her movements to the rules of art;
And, vex'd, I found that the muſician's hand
Had o'er the dancer's mind too great command. Prior.

DA'NCINGMASTER. n. ſ. [dance and maſter.] One who teaches the art of dancing.

The apes were taught their apes tricks by a dancingmaſter. L'Eſtrange.

The legs of a dancingmaſter, and the fingers of a muſician, fall, as it were, naturally, without thought or pains, into regular and admirable motions. Locke on Underſtanding.

DA'NCINGSCHOOL. n. ſ. [dancing and ſchool.] The ſchool where the art of dancing is taught.

They bid us to the Engliſh dancingſchools,
And teach lavoltas high, and ſwift courantos;
Saying our grace is only in our heels. Shakſpeare.

A certain Egyptian king endowed a dancingſchool for the inſtitution of apes of quality. L'Eſtrange.

DANDELI'ON. n. ſ. [dent de lion, French.] The name of a plant.

It agrees in all reſpects with the hawkweed, but only in its having a ſingle naked ſtalk, with one flower upon the top. Miller.

For cowſlips ſweet, let dandelions ſpread;
For Blouzelinda, bluſhſome maid, is dead! Gay's Paſtorals.

DA'NDIPRAT. n. ſ. [dandin, French.] A little fellow; an urchin: a word uſed ſometimes in fondneſs, ſometimes in contempt.

To DA'NDLE. v. a. [dandeler, Dutch.]

1. To ſhake a child on the knee, or in the hands, to pleaſe and quiet him.

Then ſhall ye tuck, and ſhall be born upon her ſides, and be dandled upon her knees. Isaiah.

Thy late brethren, which, like fairy ſprights,
Oft ſkip into our chamber thoſe ſweet nights,
And, kiſs'd and dandled on thy father's knee,
Were bleſs'd next day to tell what they did ſee. Donne.

Courts are but ſuperficial ſchools
To dandle fools. Bacon.

Sporting the lion ramp'd, and in his paw
Dandled the kid. Milton.

Motion occaſions ſleep, as we find by the common uſe of rocking froward children in cradles, or dandling them in their nurſes arms. Temple.

2. To fondle; to treat like a child.

Their child ſhall be advanc'd,
And be received for the emperor's heir;
And let the emperor dandle him for his own. Shak.

They have put me in a ſilk gown, and a gaudy fool's cap; I am aſhamed to be dandled thus, and cannot look in the glaſs without bluſhing, to ſee myſelf wheedled into ſuch a little pretty maſter. Addiſon's Guardian.

3. To delay; to procraſtinate; to protract by trifles: not in uſe.

Captains do not dandle their doings, and dally in the ſervice, as if they would not have the enemy ſubdued. Spenſer.

DA'NDLER. n. ſ. [from dandle.] He that dandles or fondles children.

DA'NDRUFF. n. ſ. [often written dendriff, from tan, the itch, and bnoſ, ſordid, filthy.] Scabs in the head; ſcurf at the roots of the hair.

DA'NEWORT. n. ſ. A ſpecies of elder; called alſo dwarf-elder, or wallwort.

DA'NGER. n. ſ. [danger, Fr. of uncertain derivation. Skinner derives it from damnum, Menage from arganea, Minſheu from δανος, death, to which Junius ſeems inclined.] Riſque; hazard; peril.

They that ſail on the ſea, tell of the danger.
Eccluſ. xliii. 24.

Our craft is in danger to be ſet at nought. Acts, x. 27.

He hath writ this to feel my affection to your honour, and to no other pretence of danger. Shakſpeare.

More danger now from man alone we find,
Than from the rocks, the billow, and the wind. Waller.

To DA'NGER. v. a. [from the noun.] To put in hazard; to endanger.

Pompey's command ſtands up
For the main ſoldier; whoſe quality going on,

2. Opakeneſs; want of tranſparency.

3. Obſcurity; want of perſpicuity; difficultneſs to the underſtanding.

4. Infernal gloom; wickedneſs.

The inſtruments of darkneſs tell us truths;
Win us with honeſt trifles, to betray us
In deepeſt conſequence. Shakeſpeare.

5. State of being intellectually clouded; ignorance; uncertainty.

All the light truth has, or can have, is from the clearneſs and validity of thoſe roots upon which it is received; to talk of any other light in the underſtanding, is to put ourſelves in the dark, or in the power of the prince of darkneſs.
Locke.

6. The empire of Satan; or the Devil.

Who hath delivered us from the power of darkneſs, and tranſlated us into the kingdom of his dear Son. Coloſſians.

DA'RKSOME. adj. [from dark.] Gloomy; obſcure; not well enlightened; not luminous.

He brought him thro' a darkſome narrow paſs
To a broad gate. Spenſer.

And her fair eyes, like ſtars that dimmed were
With darkſome cloud, now ſhew their goodly beams.
Spenſer.

You muſt not look to have an image in anything luminous; for even a face in iron, red-hot, will not be ſeen, the light confounding the ſmall differences of lightſome and darkſome, which ſhew the figure. Bacon.

A darkſome cloud of locuſts, ſwarming down,
Muſt eat, and on the ground leave nothing green.
Milton.

He, hate with us to be,
Forſook the courts of everlaſting day,
And choſe with us a darkſome houſe of mortal clay.
Addiſon.

Miſtaken bleſſing, which old age they call,
'Tis a long, naſty, darkſome hoſpital. Dryden.

The darkſome pines, that o'er yon rocks reclin'd,
Wave high, and murmur to the hollow wind. Pope.

DA'RLING. adj. [beopling, Sax. diminutive of deor.] Favourite; dear; beloved;

loved; regarded with great kindneſs and tenderneſs.

DEAMBULATION. n. ſ. [deambulatio, Latin.] The act of walking abroad.

DE'AMBU-

DEAMBULATORY. adj. [deambulo, Lat.] Relating to the practice of walking abroad.

DEAN. n. f. [decanus, Latin; doyen, Fr.] From the Greek word δεκα; in English, ten; becauſe he was anciently ſet over ten canons or prebendaries at leaſt in ſome cathedral church. Ayliffe's Parergon.

As there are two foundations of cathedral churches in England, the old and the new (the new are thoſe which Henry VIII. upon ſuppreſſion of abbeys transformed from abbot or prior, and convent, to dean and chapter) ſo there are two means of creating theſe deans; for thoſe of the old foundation are brought to their dignity much like biſhops, the king firſt ſending out his congé d'elire to the chapter, the chapter then chuſing and the biſhop confirming them, and giving his mandate to inſtal them. Thoſe of the new foundation are, by a ſhorter courſe, inſtalled by virtue of the king's letters patent, without either election or confirmation.

This word is alſo applied to divers, that are chief of certain peculiar churches or chapels; as the dean of the king's chapel, the dean of the Arches, the dean of St. George's chapel at Windſor, and the dean of Bocking in Eſſex. Cowell.

The dean and canons, or prebends, of cathedral churches, were of great uſe in the church; they were not only to be of counſel with the biſhop for his revenue, but chiefly for government in cauſes eccleſiaſtical. Uſe your beſt means to prefer ſuch to thoſe places who are fit for that purpoſe. Bacon.

DE'ANERY. n. f. [from dean.]

DELU'DABLE. adj. [from delude.] Liable to be deceived; that is easily imposed on; rather deludible.

Not will understanding omniscience, be so ready to deceive himself, as to falsify unto those whose cogitation is no ways deludable. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

To DELUDE. v. a. [deludo, Lat.]
1. To beguile; to cheat; to deceive; to impose on.
Sir, give me leave, I have deluded you;
'Tis neither Charles, nor yet the duke. Shakespeare's Henry VI.
Let not the Trojans, with a feign'd pretence
Of proffer'd peace, delude the Latian prince. Dryd.
2. To disappoint; to frustrate.

DELU'DER. n. s. [from delude.] A beguiler; a deceiver; an impostor; a cheat; a false pretender.
Say, flatterer, say, all fair deluder speak;
Answer me this, ere yet my heart does break.
Granville.
And thus the fairest deluders tune their song.
Pope.

To DELVE. v. a. [delfan, Sax. delven, Dutch; perhaps from δλφαξ, a hog. Junius.
1. To dig; to open the ground with a spade.
It shall go hard,
But I will delve one yard below the mines,
And blow them at the moon. Shakespear.
Delve of convenient depth your thrashing floor;
With temper'd clay then fill and face it o'er.
Dryden.
The filthy swine with delving snout
The rooted forest undermine. Philips.

Was call'd Sicilius. Shakespeare.

DELVE. n. s. [from the verb.] A ditch; a pit; a pitfal; a den; a cave.
He by and by
His feeble feet directed to the cry;
Which to that shady delve him brought at last,
Where Mammon erst did sun his treasury. Spenser.
Such a light and mettled dance
Saw you never yet in France;
And by leadmen, for the nonce,
That turn round like grindle-stones,
Which they dig out fro' the delves,
For their bairns bread, wives, and selves.
B. Jonson.

DELVE of Coals. A certain quantity of coals dug in the mine or pit. Dict.

DE'LVER. n. s. [from delve.] A digger; one that opens the ground with a spade.

DE'LUGE. n. s. [déluge, Fr. from diluvium, Lat.]
1. A general inundation; laying entirely under water.
The apostle doth plainly intimate, that the old world was subject to perish by a deluge, as this is subject to perish by conflagration. Burnet's Theory.
2. An overflowing of the natural bounds of a river.
But if with bays and dams they strive to force
His channel to a new or narrow course,
No longer then within his banks he dwells,
First to a torrent, then a deluge, swells. Denham.
3. Any sudden and resistless calamity.

To DELUGE. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To drown; to lay totally under water.
The restless flood the land would overflow,
By which the deluged earth would useless grow.
Blackmore.
Sudden the bursting waves rush in
Impetuous, all deluged by the foam,
The ship sinks, sounding in the vast abyss.
Philips.
2. To overwhelm; to cause to sink under the weight of any calamity.
As length corrupting into a general flood,
Shall deluge all. Pope.

DEMU'RRER. n. ſ. [demeurer, French; i. e. manere in aliquo loco, vel morari.] A kind of pauſe upon a point of difficulty in an action: for, in every action, the controverſy conſiſts either in the fact, or in the law: if in the fact, that is tried by the jury; if in law, then is the caſe plain to the judge, or ſo hard and rare, as it breedeth juſt doubt. I call that plain to the judge, wherein he is aſſured of the law; and in ſuch caſe the judge, with his aſſociates, proceeds to judgment without farther work. But when it is doubtful to him and his aſſociates, then is there ſtay made, and a time taken, either for the court to think farther upon it, and to agree, if they can; or elſe for all the juſtices to meet together in the Chequer-chamber, and, upon hearing that which the ſerjeants can ſay of both parts, to adviſe, and ſet down as law, whatſoever they conclude arts, without farther remedy. Cowell.

A prohibition was granted, and hereunto there was a demurrer. Ayliffe's Parergon.

DEN. n. f. [den, Saxon.]

1. A cavern or hollow running horizontally, or with a small obliquity, under ground; distinct from a hole which runs down perpendicularly.

They here dispersed, some in the air, some on the earth, some in the waters, some amongst the minerals, dens, and caves under the earth. Hooker.

2. The cave of a wild beast.

What, shall they seek the lion in his den,
And fright him there? Shakespeare.

The tyrant's den, whose use, though lost to fame,
Was now th' apartment of the royal dame;
The cavern, only to her father known,
By him was to his darling daughter shown. Dryd.

'Tis then the shapeless bear his den forsakes;
In woods and fields a wild destruction makes.
Dryden.

3. Den, the termination of a local name, may signify either a valley or a woody place; for the Saxon den imports both. Gibson's Camden.

DENA'Y. n. f. [a word formed between deny and nay.] Denial; refusal.

To her in haste, give her this jewel: say,
My love can give no place, bide no denay. Shak.

DENDRO'LOGY. n. f. [δένδρον and λόγος.] The natural history of trees.

DENI'ABLE. adj. [from deny.] That which may be denied; that to which one may refuse belief.

The negative authority is also deniable by reason. Brown.

DENI'AL. n. f. [from deny.]

1. Negation; the contrary to affirmation.
2. Negation; the contrary to confession.

No man more impudent to deny, where proofs were not manifest; no man more ready to confess, with a repenting manner of aggravating his own evil, where denial would but make the fault fouler. Sidney.

3. Refusal; the contrary to grant, allowance or concession.

Here comes your father; never make denial:
I must and will have Catherine to my wife. Shak.

The denial of landing, and hasty warning us away, troubled us much. Bacon.

He, as ev'ry fresh attempt is repell'd
With faint denials, weaker than before. Dryden.

4. Abjuration; contrary to acknowledgment of adherence.

We may deny God in all those acts that are capable of being morally good or evil: those are the proper scenes, in which we act out confessions or denials of him. South.

DENI'ER. n. f. [from deny.]

1. A contradictor; an opponent; one that holds the negative of a proposition.

By the word Virtue the affirmer intends our whole duty to God and man, and the denier by the word Virtue means only courage, or, at most, our duty towards our neighbour, without including the idea of the duty which we owe to God. Watts.

2. A disowner; one that does not own or acknowledge.

If it was so fearful when Christ looked his denier into repentance, what will it be when he shall look him into destruction? Scott.

3. A refuser; one that refuses.

It may be I am esteemed by my denier sufficient of myself to discharge my duty to God as a priest, though not to men as a prince. King Charles.

DENI'ER n. f. [from denarius, Lat. It is pronounced as denier, in two syllables.] A small denomination of French money; the twelfth part of a sou.

You will not pay for the glasses you have burst?
——No, not a denier Shakespeare.

To DE'NIGRATE. v. a. [denigro, Lat.] To blacken; to make black.

By suffering some impression from fire, bodies are casually or artificially denigrated in their natural complexion: thus are charcoals made black by an infection of their own suffitus. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

Hartshorn, and other white bodies, will be denigrated by heat; yet camphire would not at all lose its whiteness. Boyle.

DENIGRA'TION. n. f. [denigratio, Latin.] A blackening, or making black.

These are the advenient and artificial ways of denigration, answerably whereto may be the natural progress. Brown.

In several instances of denigration, the metals are worn off, or otherwise reduced into very minute parts. Boyle.

DENIZA'TION. n. f. [from denizen.] The act of infranchising, or making free.

That the mere Irish were reputed aliens, appears by the charters of denization, which in all ages were purchased by them. Davies.

DE'NIZEN. } n. f. [from dinasddyn, a
DE'NISON. } man of the city; or denesydd, free of the city, Welsh.] A freeman; one infranchised.

Denizen is a British law term, which the Saxons and Angles found here, and retained. Davies.

Thus th' Almighty Sire began: ye gods,
Natives, or denizens, of blest abodes,
From whence these murmurs? Dryden.

A great many plants will hardly, with nursing, be made to produce their seed out of their native soil; but corn, so necessary for all people, is fitted to grow and to feed as a free denizen of the world. Grew.

He summons straight his denizens of air;
The lucid squadrons round the sails repair. Pope.

To DE'NIZEN. v. a. [from the noun.] To infranchise; to make free.

Pride, lust, covetize, being several
To these three places, yet all are in all;
Mingled thus, their issue is incestuous;
Falsehood is denizen'd, virtue is barbarous. Donne.

DENO'MINABLE. adj. [denomino, Latin.] That may be named or denoted.

An inflammation consists of a sanguineous affluxion, or else is denominable from other humours, according to the predominancy of melancholy, phlegm, or choler. Brown's Vulg. Errours.

To DENO'MINATE. v. a. [denomino, Latin.] To name; to give a name to.

The commendable purpose of consecration being not of every one understood, they have been construed as though they had superstitiously meant either that those places, which were denominated of angels and saints, should serve for the worship of so glorious creatures; or else those glorious creatures for defence, protection, and patronage of such places. Hooker.

Predestination is destructive to all that is established among men, to all that is most precious to human nature, to the two faculties that denominate us men, understanding and will; for what use can we have of our understandings, if we cannot do what we know to be our duty? And, if we act not voluntarily, what exercise have we of our wills? Hammond.

DENOMINA'TION. n. f. [denominatio, Latin.] A name given to a thing, which commonly marks some principal quality of it.

But is there any token, denomination, or monument of the Gauls yet remaining in Ireland, as there is of the Scythians? Spenser's State of Irel.

The liking or disliking of the people gives the play the denomination of good or bad; but does not really make or constitute it such. Dryden.

Philosophy, the great idol of the learned part of the heathen world, has divided it into many sects and denominations; as Stoicks, Peripatetics, Epicureans, and the like. South.

All men are sinners: the most righteous among us must confess ourselves to come under that denomination. Rogers.

DENO'MINATIVE. adj. [from denominate.]

1. That which gives a name; that which confers a distinct appellation.
2. That which obtains a distinct appellation. This would be more analogically denominable.

The least denominative part of time is a minute, the greatest integer being a year. Locke's Answer.

DENOMINA'TOR. n. f. [from denominate.] The giver of a name; the person or thing that causes an appellation.

Both the seas of one name should have one common denominator. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

DENOMINATOR of a Fraction, is the number below the line, shewing the nature and quality of the parts which any integer is supposed to be divided into: thus in $\frac{6}{8}$, 8 the denominator shews you that the integer is supposed to be divided into 8 parts, or half quarters; and the numerator 6 shews, that you take 6 of such parts, i. e. three quarters of the whole. Harris.

When a single broken number or fraction has for its denominator a number consisting of an unit in the first place towards the left hand, and nothing but cyphers from the unit towards the right hand, it is then more aptly and rightly called a decimal fraction. Cocker's Arithmetick.

Denominator of any proportion, is the quotient arising from the division of the antecedent by the consequent: thus 6 is the denominator of the proportion that 30 hath to 5, because 5) 30 (6. This is also called the exponent of the proportion, or ratio. Harris.

DENOTA'TION. n. f. [denotatio, Latin.] The act of denoting.

They live and die in their absurdities, passing their days in perverted apprehensions and conceptions of the world, derogatory unto God, and the wisdom of the creation. Brown.

These deputed beings are derogatory from the wisdom and power of the Author of Nature, who doubtless can govern this machine he could create, by more direct and easy methods than employing these subservient divinities. Cheyne.

DE'RVIS. n. s. [dervis, French.] A Turkish priest, or monk.

Even there, where Christ vouchsaf'd to teach,
Their dervises dare an impostor preach. Sandys.

The dervis at first made some scruple of violating his promise to the dying brachman; but told him, at last, that he could conceal nothing from so excellent a prince. Spectator.

DE'SCANT. n. s. [discanto, Italian.]
1. A song or tune composed in parts.

Nay, now you are too flat,
And mar the concord with too harsh a descant.
Shakespeare.

The wakeful nightingale
All night long her amorous descant sung. Milton.

2. A discourse; a disputation; a disquisition branched out into several divisions or heads. It is commonly used as a word of censure or contempt.

Look you get a prayer-book in your hand,
And stand between two churchmen, good my lord,
For on that ground I'll build a holy descant. Shak.

Kindness would supplant our unkind reportings, and severe descants upon our brethren.
Government of the Tongue.

To DE'SCANT. v. n. [from the noun.]
1. To sing in parts.
2. To discourse at large; to make speeches: in a sense of censure or contempt.

Why I, in this weak piping time of peace,
Have no delight to pass away the time,
Unless to spy my shadow in the sun,
And descant on mine own deformity.
Shakespeare's Richard III.

Com'st thou for this, vain boaster, to survey me,
To descant on my strength, and give thy verdict?
Milton.

A virtuous man should be pleased to find people descanting upon his actions, because, when they are thoroughly canvassed and examined, they turn to his honour. Addison.

To DESCE'ND. v. n. [descendo, Latin.]
1. To go downwards; to come from a higher place to a lower; to fall; to sink.

DESCRI'PTION. n. f. [descriptio, Latin.]

1. The act of delineating or expressing any person or thing by perceptible properties.
2. The sentence or passage in which any thing is described.
   A poet must refuse all tedious and unnecessary descriptions: a robe which is too heavy, is less an ornament than a burthen. Dryden.
   Sometimes, misguided by the tuneful throng,
   I look for streams immortaliz'd in song,
   That lost in silence and oblivion lie,
   Dumb are their fountains, and their channels dry,
   That run for ever by the muse's skill,
   And in the smooth description murmur still. Addis.
3. A lax definition.
   The sort of definition, which is made up of a mere collection of the most remarkable parts or properties, is called an imperfect definition, or a description; whereas the definition is called perfect, when it is composed of the essential difference, added to general nature or genus. Watts.
4. The qualities expressed in a description.
   I'll pay six thousand, and deface the bond,
   Before a friend of this description
   Shall lose a hair. Shakesp. Merchant of Venice.

To DESCRY'. v. a. [descrier, French.]

1. To give notice of any thing suddenly discovered: as, the scout descried the enemy, or gave notice of their approach. This sense is now obsolete, but gave occasion to those which are now in use.
2. To spy out; to examine at a distance.

8. Defiance; undubdued opposition.

The life, thou gav'st me first, was lost and done;
Till with thy warlike sword, despite of fate,
To my determin'd time thou gav'st new date. Shak.

My life thou shalt command, but not my shame:
The one my duty owes; but my fair name,
Despite of death, that lives upon my grave,
To dark dishonour's use thou shalt not have. Shak.

Know I will serve the fair in thy despite. Dryd.

I have not quitted yet a victor's right;
I'll make you happy in your own despite. Dryden.

Say, would the tender creature, in despite
Of heat by day, and chilling dews by night,
Its life maintain? Blackmore.

Then, with rebel insolence, didst dare
To own and to protect that hoary ruffian;
And, in despite ev'n of thy father's justice,
To stir the factious rabble up to arms, Rowe.

3. Act of malice; act of opposition.

His punishment, eternal misery,
It would be all his solace and revenge,
As a despite done against the Most High,
Thee once to gain companion of his woe. Milton.

1. To despair; to lose hope; to become hopeless or desperate.

It is every man's duty to labour in his calling, and not to despond for any miscarriages or disappointments that were not in his own power to prevent. L'Estrange.

There is no surer remedy for superstitious and desponding weakness, than first to govern ourselves by the best improvement of that reason which providence has given us for a guide; and then, when we have done our own parts, to commit all chearfully, for the rest, to the good pleasure of heaven, with trust and resignation. L'Estrange.

Physick is their bane:
The learned leaches in despair depart,
And shake their heads, desponding of their art. Dryd.

Others depress their own minds, despond at the first difficulty; and conclude, that making any progress in knowledge, farther than serves their ordinary business, is above their capacities. Locke.

2. [In theology.] To lose hope of the divine mercy.

He considers what is the natural tendency of such a virtue, or such a vice: he is well apprized that the representation of some of these things may convince the understanding, some may terrify the conscience, some may allure the slothful, and some encourage the desponding mind. Watts.

DESPO'NDENCY. n. s. [from despondent.] Despair; hopelessness; desperation.

DESPO'NDENT. adj. [despondens, Latin.] Despairing; hopeless; without hope.

It is well known, both from ancient and modern experience, that the very boldest atheists, out of their debauches and company, when they chance to be surprised with solitude or sickness, are the most suspicious, timorous, and despondent wretches in the world. Bentley.

Congregated thrushes, linnets, sit
On the dead tree, a dull despondent flock. Thomson.

A people, great and many, and tall as the Anakims; but the Lord destroyed them before them, and they succeeded them, and dwelt in their stead. Deut. ii. 21.
'Tis safer to be that which we destroy,
Than by destruction dwell in doubtful joy. Shak.
The wise Providence hath placed a certain antipathy between some animals and many insects, whereby they delight in their destruction, though they use them not as food; as the peacock destroys snakes and adders; the weasel, mice and rats; spiders, flies; and some sorts of flies destroy spiders. Hale.
4. To put an end to; to bring to nought.
Do we not see that slothful, intemperate, and incontinent persons destroy their bodies with diseases, their reputations with disgrace, and their faculties with want? Bentley.
There will be as many sovereigns as fathers: the mother too hath her title, which destroys the sovereignty of one supreme monarch. Locke.

DESTRO'YER. n. s. [from destroy.] The person that destroys or lays waste; a murderer.
It is said, that Assur both founded it and ruined it; it may be understood, that Assur the founder was the son of Shem, and Assur the destroyer was an Assyrian. Raleigh.
To be styl'd great conquerors,
Patrons of mankind, gods, and sons of gods!
Destroyers rightly call'd, and plagues of men. Milton.
Yet, guiltless too, this bright destroyer lives;
At random wounds, nor knows the wound she gives. Pope.

DESTRU'CTIBLE. adj. [from destruo, Latin.] Liable to destruction.

DESTRUCTIBI'LITY. n. s. [from destructible.] Liableness to destruction.

DESTRU'CTION. n. s. [destructio, Latin.]

5. The ſtate of the mind under a ſtrong ſenſe of dependance upon God; devoutneſs; piety.

Grateful to acknowledge whence his good
Deſcends, thither with heart, and voice, and eyes
Directed in devotion, to adore
And worſhip God ſupreme, who made him chief
Of all his works. Milton.

From thick full choir when loud hoſannas riſe,
And ſwell the pomp of dreadful ſacrifice;
Amidſt that lofty muſic let me pour
In ſecret paſſion to the ſtarry quire,
Unheard of all but him, a ſilent prayer.
Glances on the ſtarry ſphere where our cold reliques lie,
Devotion itſelf ſhall ſteal a thought from heav'n,
One beam into the duſt, and be forgiv'n. Pope.

Prayer may be conſidered either as an exerciſe of ſubmiſſion or private prayers at ſet times and occaſions, or as a temper of the mind, a ſtate and diſpoſition of the heart, which is rightly affected with ſuch exerciſes. Law on Chriſt's Perfection.

Brown's Vulgar Errours.

DEW. n. ſ. [beap, Saxon; aauw, Dutch.] The moiſture upon the ground.

Fogs which we frequently obſerve after ſun-ſetting, even in our hotteſt months, are nothing but a vapour conſiſting of water; which vapour was ſent up in greater quantity all the foregoing day, than now in the evening: but the ſun then being above the horizon, taking it at the ſurface of the earth, and rapidly mounting it up into the atmoſphere, it was not diſcernible: the ſun being now gone off, the vapour ſtagnates at and near the earth, and ſaturates the air till it is ſo thick as to be eaſily viſible thereon: and when at length the heat there is ſomewhat further ſpent, which is uſually about the middle of the night, it falls down again in a dew, alighting upon herbs and other vegetables, which it cheriſhes, cools, and refreſhes.
Woodward.

Never yet one hour in bed
Did I enjoy the golden dew of ſleep,
But with his timorous dreams was ſtill awak'd.
Shakeſpeare.

That churchman bears a bounteous mind, indeed,
A hand as fruitful as the land that feeds us;
His dew falls every where. Shakeſpeare.

She looks as clear
As morning roſes newly waſh'd with dew. Shak.

Dews and rain are but the returns of moiſt vapours condenſed. Bacon.

And feed their fibres with reviving dew. Pope.

To DEW. v. a. [from the noun.] To wet as with dew; to moiſten; to bedew.

A trickling ſtream of balm moſt ſovereign,
And dainty dear, which on the ground ſtill fell,
And overflowed all the fertile plain,
As it had dewed been with timely rain. Fa. Queen.

With him pour we in our country's purge
Each drop of us.
—Or ſo much as it needs
To dew the ſovereign flower, and drown the weeds.
Shakeſpeare.

Give me thy hand,
That I may dew it with my mournful tears.
Shakeſpeare.

He ceas'd; diſcerning Adam with ſuch joy
Surcharg'd, as had, like grief, been dew'd in tears,
Without the vent of words, which theſe he breath'd. Milton.

Palemon above the reſt appears
In ſable garments, dew'd with guſhing tears.
Dryden.

In Gallick blood again
He dews his reeking ſword, and ſtrows the ground
With headleſs ranks. Philips.

DE'WBERRY. n. ſ. [from dew and berry.]

Dewberries, as they ſtand here among the more delicate fruit, muſt be underſtood to mean raſpberries, which are alſo of the bramble kind.
Hanmer.

Feed him with apricocks and dewberries,
With purple grapes, green figs, and mulberries.
Shakeſpeare.

DEWBESPRE'NT. part. [dew and beſprent.] Sprinkled with dew.

This evening late, by then the chewing flocks
Had ta'en their ſupper on the ſavoury herb
Of knot-graſs dewbeſprent, and were in fold,
I ſat me down to watch upon a bank
With ivy canopied, and interwove
With flaunting honey-ſuckle. Milton.

DEW-BURNING. adj. [from dew and burning.] The meaning of this compound is doubtful. Perhaps it alludes to the ſparkling of dew.

He, now to prove his late renewed might,
High brandiſhing his bright dew-burning blade,

Upon his crested scalp so sore did smite,
That to the scull a yawning wound it made.
Fairy Queen.

DE'WDROP. n. s. [dew and drop.] A drop of dew which sparkles at sun-rise.

I must go seek some dewdrops here,
And hang a pearl in every cowslip's ear. Shakesp.

An host
Innumerable as the stars of night,
Or stars of morning, dewdrops, which the sun
Impearls on ev'ry leaf, and ev'ry flower. Milton.

Rest, sweet as dewdrops on the flow'ry lawns,
When the sky opens, and the morning dawns! Tickell.

DE'WLAP. n. s. [from lapping or licking the dew.]

1. The flesh that hangs down from the throat of oxen.

Large rowles of fat about his shoulders slung,
And from his neck the double dewlap hung. Add.

2. It is used in Shakespeare for a lip flaccid with age, in contempt.

And sometimes lurk I in a gossip's bowl,
In very likeness of a roasted crab;
And when she drinks against her lips I bob,
And on the wither'd dew'lap pour the ale. Shak.

DE'WLAPT. adj. [from dewlap.] Furnished with dewlaps.

Who would believe that there were mountaineers
Dewlapt like bulls, whose throats had hanging at 'em
Wallets of flesh? Shakespeare.

The dewlapt bull now chases along the plain,
While burning love ferments in ev'ry vein. Gay.

DE'W-WORM. n. s. [from dew and worm.] A worm found in dew.

For the trout, the dew worm, which some call the lob worm, and the brandling, are the chief. Walton.

DE'WY. adj. [from dew.]

1. Resembling dew; partaking of dew.

From the earth a dewy mist
Went up, and water'd all the ground, and each
Plant of the field. Milton.

Where two adverse winds,
Sublim'd from dewy vapours in mid sky,
Engage with horrid shock, the ruffled brine
Roars stormy. Phillips.

2. Moist with dew; rosicd.

The joyous day 'gan early to appear,
And fair Aurora from her dewy bed
Of aged Tithone 'gan herself to rear,
With rosy cheeks, for shame as blushing red. Spens.

The bee with honied thigh,
That at her flow'ry work doth sing,
And the waters murmuring,
With such consort as they keep,
Entice the dewy feather'd sleep. Milton.

His dewy locks distill'd Ambrosia. Milton.

Besides the succour which cold Ancien yields,
The rock of Hernicus and dewy fields. Dryden.

My mother's blood
Runs on the dexter cheek, and this sinister
Bounds in my father's. Shakespeare.

DEXTE'RITY. n. s. [dexteritas, Lat.]

1. Readiness of limbs; activity; readiness to attain skill; skill; expertness.

2. Readiness of contrivance; quickness of expedient; skill of management.

His wisdom, by often evading from perils, was turned rather into a dexterity to deliver himself from dangers, when they pressed him, than into a providence to prevent and remove them afar off. Bacon.

They attempted to be knaves, but wanted art and dexterity. South.

The same Protestants may, by their dexterity, render themselves the national religion, and dispel the church-revenues among their pastors. Swift

DE'XTEROUS. adj. [dexter, Latin.]

For both their dext'rous hands the lance could wield. Pope.

2. Expert in management; subtle; full of expedients.

They confine themselves, and are dexterous managers enough of the wares and products of that corner with which they content themselves. Locke.

DE'XTEROUSLY. adv. [from dexterous.] Expertly; skilfully; artfully.

The magistrate sometimes cannot do his own office dexterously, but by acting the minister. South.

But then my study was to cog the dice,
And dexterously to throw the lucky vice. Dryden.

A scirrhous tunicle or skin, which should hinder the liver from enabling the dextral parts, we must not conceive it diffuseth its virtue by mere irradiation, but by its veins and proper vessels. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

DEXTRA'LITY. n. s. [from dextral.] The state of being on the right, not the left, side.

If there were a determinate prepotency in the right, and such as ariseth from a constant root in nature, we might expect the same in other animals, whole parts are also differenced by dextrality. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

DIABE'TES. n. s. [διαβάλης.] A morbid copiousness of urine; a fatal colliquation by the urinary passages.

An increase of that secretion may accompany the general colliquations; as in fluxes, hectic sweats and coughs, diabetes, and other consumptions. Dullam's Physico-Theology.

DIABO'LICAL. } adj. [from diabolus, La-
DIABO'LICK. } tin.] Devilish; partaking of the qualities of the devil; impious; atrocious; nefarious; pertaining to the devil.

This, in other beasts observ'd,
Doubt might beget of diabolick pow'r,
Active within, beyond the sense of brute. Milton.

Does not the ambitious, the envious, and the revengeful man know very well, that the thirst of blood, and affectation of dominion by violence and oppression, is a most diabolical outrage upon the laws of God and Nature? L'Estrange.

The practice of lying is a diabolical exercise, and they that use it are the devil's children. Ray.

Damned spirits must needs be all envy, despair, and rage; and have so much of a diabolical nature in them, as to wish all men to share their misery. Atterbury.

DIACO'DIUM. n. s. [διακώδιον.] The syrup of poppies.

DIACO'USTICS. n. s. [διακουστικὰ.] The doctrine of sounds.

DI'ADEM. n. s. [diadema, Latin.]

1. A tiara; an enfign of royalty bound about the head of eastern monarchs.

The sacred diadem in pieces rent,
And purple robe gored with many a wound. Spenser.

A list the cobblers' temples tie,
To keep the hair out of their eyes;
From whence 'tis plain the diadem,
That princes wear, derives from them. Swift.

2. The mark of royalty worn on the head; the crown.

A crown,
Golden in show, is but a wreath of thorns;
Brings dangers, troubles, cares, and sleepless nights,
To him who wears the regal diadem. Milton.

Why should he ravish then that diadem
From your grey temples, which the hand of time
Must shortly plant on his? Denham.

Faction, that once made diadems her prey,
And stopt our prince in his triumphant way,
Fled like a mist before this radiant day. Roscom.

DI'ADEMED. adj. [from diadem.] Adorned with a diadem; crowned.

Not so, when diadem'd with rays divine,
Touch'd with the flame that breaks from virtue's shrine,
Her priestless muse forbids the good to die,
And opes the temple of eternity. Pope.

DI'ADROM. n. s. [διαδρομὴ.] The time in which any motion is performed; the time in which a pendulum performs its vibration.

A gry is one tenth of a line, a line one tenth of an inch, an inch one tenth of a philosophical foot, a philosophical foot one third of a pendulum; whose diadroms, in the latitude of forty five degrees, are each equal to one second of time, or a sixtieth of a minute. Locke.

DIÆ'RESIS. n. s. [διαίρεσις.] The separation or disjunction of syllables; as aër.

DIAGNO'STICK. n. s. [διαγινώσκω.] A symptom by which a disease is distinguished from others.

I shall lay down some indisputable marks of this vice, that whenever we see the tokens, we may conclude the plague is in the house:—let us hear your diagnosticks. Collier on Pride.

One of our physicians proved disappointed of his prognosticks, or rather diagnosticks. Harvey on Consumptions.

DIA'GONAL. adj. [διαγώνιος.] Reaching from one angle to another, so as to divide a parallelogram into equal parts.

The monstrosity of the badger is ill contrived, and with some disadvantage; the shortness being fixed unto the legs of one side, that might have been more properly placed upon the diagonal movers. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

All sorts of stone composed of granules, will cut and rive in any direction, as well in a perpendicular, or in a diagonal, as horizontally and parallel to the side of the strata. Woodward.

DIA'GONAL. n. s. [from the adjective.] A line drawn from angle to angle, and dividing a square into equal parts.

When a man has in his mind the idea of two lines, viz. the side and diagonal of a square, whereof the diagonal is an inch long, he may have the idea also of the division of that line into a certain number of equal parts. Locke.

DIA'GONALLY. adv. [from diagonal.] In a diagonal direction.

The right and left are not defined by philosophers according to common acceptation, that is, respectively from one man unto another, or any constant site in each, as though that should be the right in one, which, upon contront or facing, stands athwart or diagonally unto the other; but were distinguished according unto their activity, and predominant locomotion, on the either side. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

DI'AGRAM. n. s. [διάγραμμα.] A delineation of geometrical figures; a mathematical scheme.

Many a fair precept in poetry is like a seeming demonstration in the mathematicks; very specious in the diagram, but failing in the mechanick operation. Dryden.

Why do not these persons make a diagram of these cogitative lines and angles, and demonstrate their properties of perception and appetite, as plainly as we know the other properties of triangles and circles? Bentley.

DIAGRY'DIATES. n. s. [from diagrydium, Lat.] Strong purgatives made with diagrydium.

All choleick humours ought to be evacuated by diagrydiates, mixed with tartar, or some acid, or rhubarb powder. Floyer.

DI'AL.

DI'AL. n. ſ. [dial, Skinner.] A plate marked with lines, where a hand or ſhadow ſhews the hour.

O, gentlemen, the time of life is ſhort:
To ſpend that ſhortneſs baſely were too long,
Though life did ride upon a dial's point,
Still ending at th' arrival of an hour.
Shakeſpeare's Henry IV.

If the motion be very ſlow, we perceive it not: we have no ſenſe of the accretive motion of plants or animals, and the fly ſhadow ſteals away upon the dial, and the quickeſt eye can diſcover no more than that it is gone. Glanville.

DIAL-PLATE. n. ſ. [dial and plate.] That on which hours or lines are marked.

Strada tells us that the two friends, being each of them poſſeſſed of a magnetical needle, made a kind of dial-plate, inſcribing it with the four and twenty letters, in the ſame manner as the hours of the day are marked upon the ordinary dial-plate. Addiſon's Spectator.

DI'ALECT. n. ſ. [διάλεκτος.]

1. The ſubdiviſion of a language; as the Attic, Doric, Ionic, Æolic dialects.
2. Style; manner of expreſſion.

When themſelves do practiſe that whereof they write, they change their dialect; and thoſe words they ſhun, as if there were in them ſome ſecret ſting. Hooker.

3. Language; ſpeech.

In her youth
There is a prone and ſpeechleſs dialect,
Such as move men. Shakeſp. Meaſure for Meaſure.

If the conferring of kindneſs did not bind the perſon upon whom it was conferred to the return of gratitude, why, in the univerſal dialect of the world, are kindneſſes ſtill called obligations? South.

DIALE'CTICAL. adj. [from dialectick.] Logical; argumental.

Thoſe dialectical ſubtilties, that the ſchoolmen employ about phyſiological myſteries, more declare the wit of him that uſes them, than increaſe the knowledge of ſober lovers of truth. Boyle.

DIALE'CTICK. n. ſ. [διαλεκτικὴ.] Logick; the art of reaſoning.

DI'ALLING. n. ſ. [from dial.] The ſciatherick ſcience; the knowledge of ſhadow; the art of conſtructing dials on which the ſhadow may ſhew the hour.

DI'ALIST. n. ſ. [from dial.] A conſtructer of dials.

Some think dialiſts, by the geometrick conſiderations of lines, have found out rules to mark out the irregular motion of the ſhadow in all latitudes, and on all planes. Moxon.

DIA'LOGIST. n. ſ. [from dialogue.] A ſpeaker in a dialogue or conference; a writer of dialogues.

DI'ALOGUE. n. ſ. [διάλογος.] A conference; a converſation between two or more, either real or feigned.

Will you hear the dialogue that the two learned men have compiled in praiſe of the owl and cuckow? Shakeſpeare.

Oh, the impudence of this wicked ſex! Laſcivious dialogues are innocent with you.
Dryden's Spaniſh Friar.

In eaſy dialogues is Fletcher's praiſe;
He mov'd the mind, but had not pow'r to raiſe.
Dryden.

To DI'ALOGUE. v. a. [from the noun.] To diſcourſe with another; to converſe.

Doſt dialogue with thy ſhadow? Shak. Timon.

DIA'METER. n. ſ. [διὰ and μέτρον.] The line which, paſſing through the centre of a circle, or other curvilinear figure, divides it into equal parts.

The ſpace between the earth and the moon, according to Ptolemy, is ſeventeen times the diameter of the earth, which makes, in a groſs account, about one hundred and twenty thouſand miles. Raleigh.

The bay of Naples is the moſt delightful one that I ever ſaw: it lies in almoſt a round figure of about thirty miles in the diameter. Addiſon on Italy.

DIAMETRAL. adj. [from diameter.] Deſcribing the diameter; relating to the diameter.

DIA'METRALLY. adv. [from diametral.] According to the direction of a diameter; in direct oppoſition.

Chriſtian piety is, beyond all other things, diametrally oppoſed to profaneneſs and impiety of actions. Hammond.

DIAMETRICAL. adj. [from diameter.]

1. Deſcribing a diameter.
2. Obſerving the direction of a diameter.

The ſin of calumny is ſet in a moſt diametrical oppoſition to the evangelical precept of loving our neighbours as ourſelves. Government of the Tongue.

DIAMETRICALLY. adv. [from diametrical.] In a diametrical direction.

He perſuaded the king to conſent to what was diametrically againſt his conſcience and his honour, and, in truth, his ſecurity. Clarendon.

Thus intercepted in its paſſage, the vapour, which cannot penetrate the ſtratum diametrically, glides along the lower ſurface of it, permeating the horizontal interval, which is betwixt the ſaid denſe ſtratum and that which lies underneath it. Woodw.

DI'AMOND. n. ſ. [diamant, Fr. adamas, Latin.]

The diamond, the moſt valuable and hardeſt of all the gems, is, when pure, perfectly clear and pellucid as the pureſt water; and is eminently diſtinguiſhed from all other ſubſtances by its vivid ſplendour, and the brightneſs of its reflexions. It is extremely various in ſhape and ſize, being found in the greateſt quantity very ſmall, and the larger ones extremely ſeldom met with. The largeſt ever known is that in the poſſeſſion of the Great Mogul, which weighs two hundred and ſeventy-nine carats, and is computed to be worth ſeven hundred and ſeventy-nine thouſand two hundred and forty-four pounds. The diamond bears the force of the ſtrongeſt fires, except the concentrated ſolar rays, without hurt; and even that infinitely fierceſt of all fires does it no injury unleſs directed to its weaker parts. It bears a glaſs-houſe fire for many days, and if taken carefully out, and ſuffered to cool by degrees, is found as bright and beautiful as before, but if taken haſtily out, it will ſometimes crack, and even ſplit into two or three pieces. The places where we have diamonds are the Eaſt Indies and the Braſils; and though they are uſually found clear and colourleſs, yet they are ſometimes ſlightly tinged with the colours of the other gems, by the mixture of ſome metalline particles. Hill on Foſſils.

Give me the ring of mine you had at dinner;
Or, for the diamond, the chain you promiſ'd.
Shakeſpeare.

I ſee how thine eye would emulate the diamond: thou haſt the right arched bent of the brow. Shak.

The diamond is preferrable and vaſtly ſuperior to all others in luſtre and beauty; as alſo in hardneſs, which renders it more durable and laſting, and therefore much more valuable, than any other ſtone. Woodward.

The diamond is by mighty monarchs worn,
Fair as the ſtar that uſhers in the morn. Blackm.

The lively diamond drinks thy pureſt rays,
Collected light, compact. Thomſon.

DI'APASE. n. ſ. [διὰ πασῶν.] A chord including all tones. The old word for diapaſon. See DIAPASON.

And 'twixt them both a quadrant was the baſe,
Proportion'd equally by ſeven and nine;
Nine was the circle ſet in heaven's place,
All which compacted made a good diapaſe. Spenſer.

The ſweet numbers and melodious meaſures,
With which I wont the winged words to tie,
And make a tuneful diapaſe of pleaſures,
Now being let to run at liberty. Spenſer.

DIAPA'SON. n. ſ. [διὰ πασῶν.]

Diapaſon denotes a chord which includes all tones: it is the ſame with that we call an eighth or an octave; becauſe there are but ſeven tones or notes, and then the eighth is the ſame again with the firſt. Harris.

It diſcovereth the true coincidence of ſounds into diapaſons, which is the return of the ſame ſound. Bacon.

Harſh din
Broke the fair muſick that all creatures made
To their great Lord, whoſe love their motion ſway'd
In perfect diapaſon, whilſt they ſtood
In firſt obedience, and their ſtate of good. Milton.

Many a ſweet rite, many as ſweet a ſtrain,
A full mouth diapaſon ſwallows all. Crashaw.

From harmony, from heavenly harmony,
This univerſal frame began,
From harmony to harmony
Through all the compaſs of the notes it ran,
The diapaſon cloſing full in man. Dryden.

DI'APER. n. ſ. [diapre, Fr. of uncertain etymology.]

1. Linen cloth woven in flowers, and other figures; the fineſt ſpecies of figured linen after damaſk.

Not any damſel, which her vaunteth moſt
In ſkilful knitting of ſoft ſilken twine,
Nor any weaver, which his work doth boaſt
In diaper, in damaſk, or in lyne,
Might in their diverſe cunning ever dare
With this ſo curious net-work to compare. Spenſer.

2. A napkin; a towel.

Let one attend him with a ſilver baſon
Full of roſe water, and beſtrew'd with flowers;
Another bear the ewer, a third a diaper. Shakeſp.

The dart only served to confirm him in his first opinion, that it was his destiny to die in the ensuing combat. Dryden.

Talk not of life or ransom, he replies;
Patroclus dead, whoever meets me, dies:
In vain a single Trojan sues for grace;
But least the sons of Priam's hateful race:
Die then, my friend! what boots it to deplore?
The great, the good Patroclus is no more!
He, far thy better, was foredoom'd to die;
And thou, dost thou, bewail mortality? Pope's Homer.

3. It has by before an instrument of death.

Their young men shall die by the sword; their sons and daughters shall die by famine. Jerem.

4. Of before a disease.

The swelling of his wounds to mitigate,
And made him pray both early and late. Fairy Queen.

Shew a while like fearful war,
To diet rank minds sick of happiness,
And purge th' obstructions which begin to stop
Our very veins of life. Shakspeare's Henry IV.

He was not taken well, he had not din'd:
The veins unbak'd, our blood is cold, and then
We pout upon the morning, are unapt
To give or to forgive, but when we've stuff'd
These pipes, and these conveyances of blood,
With wine and feeding, we have suppler souls
Than in our priest-like fasts; therefore I'll watch him
Till he be dieted to my request. Shakesp. Coriol.

I will attend my husband, be his nurse,
Diet his sickness; for it is my office. Shakespeare.

Henceforth my early care
Shall tend thee, and the fertile burden ease;
Till, *diet*ed by thee, I grow mature
In knowledge as the gods, who all things know. Milton.

We have lived upon expedients, of which no country has less occasion: we have dieted a healthy body into a consumption, by plying it with physick, instead of food. Swift.

2. To give food to.

I'm partly led to diet my revenge,
For that I do suspect the lusty Moor
Hath leapt into my seat. Shakspeare's Othello.

3. To board; to supply with diet.

To DI'ET. v. n.

1. To eat by rules of phyſick.

2. To eat; to feed.

I join with thee calm peace and quiet;
Spare faſt, that oft with gods doth diet. Milton.

DI'ET-DRINK. n. ſ. [diet and drink.] Medicated liquors; drink brewed with medicinal ingredients.

The old army on will do that better than the lady's diet-drinks, or apothecary's medicines. Locke.

DI'ET. n. ſ. [from dies, an appointed day, Skinner; from diet, an old German word ſignifying a multitude, Junius.] An aſſembly of princes or eſtates.

An emperor in title without territory, who can ordain nothing of importance but by a diet, or aſſembly of the eſtates of many free princes, eccleſiaſtical and temporal. Raleigh.

DI'ETARY. adj. [from diet.] Pertaining to the rules of diet. Dict.

DI'ETER. n. ſ. [from diet.] One who preſcribes rules for eating; one who prepares food by medicinal rules.

He fauc'd our broth as Juno had been ſick,
And he her dieter. Shakeſpeare's Cymbeline.

DIETE'TICAL. } adj. [διαιτητικὸς.] Relat-
DIETE'TICK. } ing to diet; belonging to the medicinal cautions about the uſe of food.

He received no other counſel than to refrain from cold drink, which was but a dietetical caution, and ſuch as culinary preſcription might have afforded. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

This book of Cheyne's became the ſubject of converſation, and produced even treats in the dietetical philoſophy. Arbuthnot on Aliments, Pref.

To DI'FFER. v. n. [differo, Latin.]

1. To be diſtinguiſhed from; to have properties and qualities not the ſame with thoſe of another perſon or thing.

If the olive be a little wet on the top, it will make a differing ſound from the ſame part dry. Bacon.

Thy prejudices, Sypher, won't diſcern
What virtues grow from ignorance and chance,
Nor how the hero differs from the brute. Addiſon.

The ſeveral parts of the ſame animal differ in their qualities. Arbuthnot.

2. To contend; to be at variance.

A man of judgment ſhall ſometimes hear ignorant men differ, and know well within himſelf that thoſe which to differ mean one thing, and yet they themſelves never agree. Bacon.

Here uncontroll'd you may in judgment ſit;
We'll never differ with a crowded pit. Rowe.

3. To be of a contrary opinion.

In things merely ſpeculative, as theſe are, and no ingredients of our faith, it is free to differ from one another in our opinions and ſentiments. Burnet's Theory.

There are certain meaſures to be kept, which may leave a tendency rather to gain than to irritate thoſe who differ with you in their ſentiments. Addiſon's Freeholder.

Others differ with me about the truth and reality of theſe ſpeculations. Cheyne.

DI'FFERENCE. n. ſ. [differentia, Latin.]

1. State of being diſtinct from ſomething; contrariety to identity.

Where the faith of the holy church is one, a difference between cuſtoms of the church doth no harm. Hooker.

2. The quality by which one differs from another.

This nobility, or difference from the vulgar, was not in the beginning given to the ſucceſſion of blood, but to the ſucceſſion of virtue. Raleigh.

Thus, born alike, from virtue firſt began
The difference that diſtinguiſh'd man from man:
He claim'd no title from deſcent of blood;
But that, which made him noble, made him good. Dryden.

Though it be uſeful to diſcern every variety that is to be found in nature, yet it is not convenient to conſider every difference that is in things, and divide them into diſtinct claſſes under every ſuch difference. Locke.

3. The diſproportion between one thing and another, cauſed by the qualities of each.

You ſhall ſee great difference betwixt our Bohemia and your Sicilia. Shakeſp. Winter's Tale.

Oh the ſtrange difference of man and man!
To thee a woman's ſervices are due;
My fool uſurps my body. Shakeſp. King Lear.

Here might be ſeen a great difference between men practiſed to fight, and men accuſtomed only to ſpoil. Hayward.

4. Diſpute; debate; quarrel; controverſy.

What was the difference?

——It was a contention in publick. Shak. Cymb.

He is weary of his life, that hath a difference with any of them, and will walk abroad after daylight. Sandys.

Nothing could have fallen out more unluckily than that there ſhould be ſuch differences among them about that which they pretend to be the only means of ending differences. Tillotſon.

5. Diſtinction.

Our conſtitution does not only make a difference between the guilty and the innocent, but, even among the guilty, between ſuch as are more or leſs criminal. Addiſon's Freeholder.

6. Point in queſtion; ground of controverſy.

Are you acquainted with the difference
That holds this preſent queſtion in the court?
Shakeſpeare.

7. A logical diſtinction.

Some are never without a difference; and commonly, by amuſing men with a ſubtilty, blanch the matter. Bacon.

8. Evidences of diſtinction; differential marks.

Henry had the title of ſovereign, yet did not put thoſe things in execution which are the true marks and differences of ſovereignty. Davies.

9. Diſtinct kind.

This is notoriouſly known in ſome differences of brake or fern. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

To DI'FFERENCE. v. a. [from the noun.] To cauſe a difference; to make one thing not the ſame as another.

Moſt are apt to ſeek all the differences of letters in thoſe articulating motions; whereas ſeveral combinations of letters are framed by the very ſame motions of thoſe organs which are commonly obſerved, and are differenced by other concurrent cauſes. Holder.

Cities differenceth a civil and well cultivated region from a barren and deſolate wilderneſs. Ray.

We ſee nothing that differences the courage of Mneſtheus from that of Sergeſthus. Pope's Eſſay on Homer.

DI'FFERENT. adj. [from differ.]

1. Diſtinct; not the ſame.

There are covered galleries that lead from the palace to five different churches. Addiſon on Italy.

2. Of contrary qualities.

The Britons change
Sweet native home for unaccuſtom'd air,
And other climes, where different food and ſoil
Portend diſtempers. Philips.

3. Unlike; diſſimilar.

Neither the ſhape of faces, nor the age, nor the colour, ought to be alike in all figures, any more than the hair; becauſe men are as different from each other, as the regions in which they are born are different. Dryden's Dufreſnoy.

Happineſs conſiſts in things which produce pleaſure, and in the abſence of thoſe which cauſe any pain: now theſe, to different men, are very different things. Locke.

DIFFERE'NTIAL Method, is applied to the doctrine of infiniteſimals, or infinitely ſmall quantities, called the arithmetick of fluxions. It conſiſts in deſcending from whole quantities to their infinitely ſmall differences, and comparing together theſe infinitely ſmall differences, of what kind ſoever they be: and from thence it takes the name of the differential calculus, or analyſis of infiniteſimals. Harris.

DI'FFERENTLY. adv. [from different.] In a different manner.

He may conſider how differently he is affected by the ſame thought, which preſents itſelf in a great writer, from what he is when he finds it delivered by an ordinary genius. Addiſon.

DI'FFERINGLY. adv. [from differing.] In a different manner.

Such protuberant and concave parts of a ſurface may remit the light ſo differingly, as to vary a colour. Boyle.

DIFFI'CIL. adj. [difficilis, Latin.]

1. Difficult; hard; not eaſy; not obvious. Little uſed.

That that ſhould give motion to an unwieldy bulk, which itſelf hath neither bulk nor motion, is of as difficil apprehenſion as any myſtery in nature. Glanville's Sceptis.

Latin was not more difficil,
Than to a blackbird 'tis to whiſtle. Hudibras.

2. Scrupulous; hard to be perſuaded.

The cardinal finding the pope difficil in granting the diſpenſation, doth uſe it as a principal argument, concerning the king's merit, that he had touched none of thoſe denials which had been levied by popes in England. Bacon.

DIFFI'CILNESS. n. ſ. [from difficil.] Difficulty to be perſuaded; incompliance; impracticability. A word not in uſe, but proper.

There be that in their nature do not affect the good of others: the lighter ſort of malignity turneth but to a roſtneſs, or forwardneſs, or aptneſs to oppoſe, or difficilneſs, or the like, but the deeper ſort, to envy and mere miſchief. Bacon.

DI'FFICULT. adj. [difficilis, Latin.]

1. Hard; not eaſy; not facil.

It is difficult in the eyes of this people. Zachar.

2. Troubleſome; vexatious.

3. Hard to pleaſe; peeviſh; moroſe.

DI'FFICULTLY. adv. [from difficult.] Hardly; with difficulty.

A man, who has always indulged himſelf in the full enjoyment of his ſtation, will difficultly be perſuaded to think any methods unjuſt that offer to continue it. Rogers's Sermons.

DI'FFICULTY. n. ſ. [from difficult; difficulté, French.]

1. Hardneſs; contrariety to eaſineſs or facility.

The religion which, by this covenant, we engage ourſelves to obſerve, is a work of labour and difficulty; a ſervice that requires our greateſt care and attention. Rogers.

2. That which is hard to accompliſh; that which is not eaſy.

They miſtake difficulties for impoſſibilities: a pernicious miſtake certainly; and the more pernicious, for that men are ſeldom convinced of it, till their conviction do them no good. South.

3. Diſtreſs; oppoſition.

Thus, by degrees, he roſe to Jove's imperial ſeat:
Thus difficulties prove a ſoul legitimately great. Dryd.

4. Perplexity

4. Perplexity in affairs; uneaſineſs of circumſtances.

They lie under ſome difficulties by reaſon of the emperor's diſpleaſure, who has forbidden their manufactures. Addiſon on Italy.

5. Objection; cavil.

Men ſhould conſider, that raiſing difficulties concerning the myſteries in religion, cannot make them more wiſe, learned, or virtuous. Swift.

To DIFFI'DE, v. n. [diffido, Latin.] To diſtruſt; to have no confidence in.

With hope and fear
The woman did the new ſolution hear:
The man diffides in his own augury,
And doubt, the gods. Dryden.

DI'FFIDENCE. n. ſ. [from diffide.]

1. Diſtruſt; want of confidence in others.

No man almoſt thought himſelf ſecure, and men durſt ſcarce commune or talk one with another, but there was a general diffidence every where. Bacon's Henry VII.

You have brought ſcandal
To Iſrael, diffidence of God, and doubt
In feeble hearts, propenſe enough before
To waver. Milton's Agoniſtes.

2. Doubt; want of confidence in ourſelves.

If the evidence of its being, or that this is its true ſenſe, be only on probable proofs, our aſſent can reach no higher than an aſſurance or diffidence ariſing from the more or leſs apparent probability of the proofs. Locke.

Be ſilent always when you doubt your ſenſe,
And ſpeak, though ſure, with ſeeming diffidence. Pope.

Whatſoever atheiſts think on, or whatſoever they look on, all do adminiſter ſome reaſons for ſuſpicion and diffidence, leſt poſſibly they may be in the wrong, and then it is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God. Bentley.

DI'FFIDENT. adj. [from diffide.]

1. Diſtruſtful; doubting others.

Be not diffident
Of wiſdom, ſhe deſerts thee not, if thou
Diſmiſs not her, when moſt thou need'ſt her nigh. Milton.

Pliny ſpeaks of the Seres, the ſame people with the Chineſe, as being very ſhy and diffident in their manner of dealing. Arbuthnot.

2. Doubtful of an event, uſed of things; uncertain.

I was really ſo diffident of it, as to let it lie by me theſe two years, juſt as you now ſee it. Pope.

3. Doubtful of himſelf; not confident.

I am not ſo confident of my own ſufficiency, as not willingly to admit the counſel of others; but yet I am not ſo diffident of myſelf, as brutiſhly to ſubmit to any man's dictates. King Charles.

Diſtreſs makes the humble heart diffident. Clariſſa.

To DIFFI'ND. v. a. [diffindo, Latin.] To cleave in two; to ſplit. Dict.

DIFFI'SSION. n. ſ. [diffiſſio, Latin.] The act of cleaving or ſplitting. Dict.

DIFFLA'TION. n. ſ. [diffiare, Latin.] The act of ſcattering with a blaſt of wind. Dict.

DI'FFLUENCE. } n. ſ. [from diffluo, Lat.]
DI'FFLUENCY. } The quality of falling away on all ſides; the effect of fluidity; the contrary to conſiſtency.

Ice is water congealed by the frigidity of the air, whereby it acquireth no new form, but rather a conſiſtence or determination of its diffluency; and amitteth not its eſſence, but condition of fluidity. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

DI'FFLUENT. adj. [diffluens, Lat.] Flowing every way; not conſiſtent; not fixed.

DI'FFORM. adj. [from forma, Latin.] Contrary to uniform; having parts of different ſtructure; diſſimilar; unlike; irregular: as, a difform flower, one of which the leaves are unlike each other.

The unequal refractions of difform rays proceed not from any contingent irregularities; ſuch as are veins, an uneven poliſh, or fortuitous poſition of the pores of glaſs. Newton.

DIFFO'RMITY. n. ſ. [from difform.] Diverſity of form; irregularity; diſſimilitude.

While they murmur againſt the preſent diſpoſure of things, they deſire in them a difformity from the primitive rule, and the idea of that mind that formed all things beſt. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

DIFFRA'NCHISEMENT. n. ſ. [franchiſe, French.] The act of taking away the privileges of a city.

To DIFFU'SE. v. a. [diffuſus, Latin.]

1. To pour out upon a plane, ſo that the liquor may run every way; to pour without particular direction.

When theſe waters began to riſe at firſt, long before they could ſwell to the height of the mountains, they would diffuſe themſelves every way. Burnet's Theory.

2. To ſpread; to ſcatter; to diſperſe.

Wiſdom had ordain'd
Good out of evil to create; inſtead
Of ſpirits malign, a better race to bring
Into their vacant room, and thence diffuſe
His good to worlds, and ages, infinite. Milton.

No ſect wants its apoſtles to propagate and diffuſe it. Decay of Piety.

A chief renown'd in war,
Whoſe race ſhall bear aloft the Latian name,
And through the conquer'd world diffuſe our fame. Dryden.

His eyes diffuſ'd a venerable grace,
And charity itſelf was in his face. Dryden's Good Parſon.

DIFFU'SE. adj. [diffuſus, Latin.]

1. Scattered; widely ſpread.
2. Copious; not conciſe.

DIFFU'SED. participial adj. [from diffuſe.] This word ſeems to have ſignified, in Shakeſpeare's time, the ſame as wild, uncouth, irregular.

Let them from forth a ſawpit raſh at once,
With ſome diffuſed ſong. Shak. M. W. of Windſ.

He grows like ſavages,
To ſwearing and ſtern looks, diffus'd attire,
And every thing that ſeems unnatural. Shakeſpeare's Henry V.

DIFFU'SEDLY. adv. [from diffuſed.] Widely; diſperſedly; in manner of that which is ſpread every way.

DIFFU'SEDNESS. n. ſ. [from diffuſed.] The ſtate of being diffuſed; diſperſion.

DIFFU'SELY. adv. [from diffuſe.]

1. Widely; extenſively.
2. Copiouſly; not conciſely.

DIFFU'SION. n. ſ. [from diffuſe.]

1. Diſperſion; the ſtate of being ſcattered every way.

Whereas all bodies act either by the communication of their natures, or by the impreſſions and ſignatures of their motions, the diffuſion of ſpecies viſible ſeemeth to participate more of the former operation, and the ſpecies inviſible of the latter. Bacon's Natural Hiſtory.

A ſheet of very well ſtreaked marbled paper did not caſt diſtinct colours upon the wall, nor throw its light with an equal diffuſion; but threw its beams, unſtained and bright, to this and that part of the wall. Boyle on Colours.

2. Copiouſneſs; exuberance of ſtyle.

DIFFU'SIVE. adj. [from diffuſe.]

1. Having the quality of ſcattering any thing every way.

Diffuſive of themſelves, where'er they paſs
They make that warmth in others they expect:
Their valour works like bodies on a glaſs,
And does its image on their men project. Dryd.

2. Scattered; diſperſed; having the quality of ſuffering diffuſion.

All liquid bodies are diffuſive; for their parts, being in motion, have no connexion, but glide and fall off any way. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

No man is of ſo general and diffuſive a luſt, as to proſecute his amours all the world over. South.

The ſtars, no longer overlaid with weight,
Exert their heads from underneath the maſs,
And upward ſhoot, and kindle as they paſs,
And with diffuſive light adorn their heav'nly place. Dryden.

Cheriſh'd with hope, and fed with joy, it grows;
Its cheerful buds their opening bloom diſcloſe,
And round the happy ſoil diffuſive odour flows. Prior.

3. Extended.

They are not agreed among themſelves where infallibility is ſeated; whether in the pope alone, or a council alone, or in both together, or in the diffuſive body of Chriſtians. Tillotſon.

DIFFU'SIVELY. adv. [from diffuſive.] Widely; extenſively; every way.

DIFFU'SIVENESS. n. ſ. [from diffuſive.]

1. Extenſion; diſperſion; the power of diffuſing; the ſtate of being diffuſed.
2. Want of conciſeneſs; large compaſs of expreſſion.

The fault that I find with a modern legend, is its diffuſiveneſs: you have ſometimes the whole ſide of a medal over-run with it. Addiſ. on Med.

To DIG. v. a. preter. dug, or digged; part. paſſ. dug, or digged. [dic, Saxon, a ditch; dyger, Daniſh, to dig.]

1. To pierce with a ſpade.

Then ſaid he unto me, Son of man, dig now in the wall; and when I had digged in the wall, I beheld a door. Ezek.

2. To form by digging.

Seek with heart and mouth to build up the walls of Jeruſalem, which you have broken down; and to fill up the mines that you have digged, by craft and ſubtlety, to overthrow the ſame. Wotton.

He built towers in the deſert, and digged many wells; for he had much cattle. 2 Chron. xxvi. 10.

3. To cultivate the ground by turning it with a ſpade.

The walls of your garden, without their furniture, look as ill as the ſide of your houſe; ſo that you cannot dig up your garden too often. Temple.

Be firſt to dig the ground, be firſt to burn
The branches fore. Dryden's Virgil.

4. To pierce with a ſharp point.

A ravenous vulture in his open'd ſide
Her crooked beak and cruel talons tried;
Still for the growing liver dig'g'd his breaſt,
The growing liver ſtill ſupplied the feaſt. Dryden's Æneid.

5. To gain by digging.

It is digged out of even the higheſt mountains, and all parts of the earth contingently; as the pyrites. Woodward.

Nor was the ground alone requir'd to bear
Her annual income to the crooked ſhare;
But greedy mortals, rummaging her ſtore,
Digg'd from her entrails firſt the precious ore. Dryden's Ovid.

To DIG. v. n. To work with a ſpade; to work in making holes, or turning the ground.

They long for death, but it comes not; and dig for it more than for hid treaſures. Job, iii. 21.

The Italians have often dug into lands, deſcribed in old authors as the places where ſtatues or obeliſks ſtood, and ſeldom failed of ſucceſs. Addiſon's Travels.

To DIG up. v. a. To throw up that which is covered with earth.

If I digg'd up thy forefathers graves,
And hung their rotten coffins up in chains,
It would not ſtake mine ire. Shakſpear.

DI'GAMY. n. ſ. [διγαμία.] Second marriage; marriage to a ſecond wife after the death of the firſt: as bigamy, having two wives at once.

Dr. Champney may prove, that archbiſhop Cranmer was twice married, which is not denied: but brings nothing to prove that ſuch bigamy, or digamy rather, deprives a biſhop of the lawful uſe of his power of ordaining. Eyſhop Parne.

DI'GERENT. adj. [digerens, Latin.] That which has the power of digeſting, or cauſing digeſtion. Dict.

DI'GEST. n. ſ. [digeſta, Latin.] The pandect of the civil law, containing the opinions of the ancient lawyers.

I had a purpoſe to make a particular digeſt, or recompilement to the laws of mine own nation. Bacon.

Laws in the digeſt ſhew that the Romans applied themſelves to trade. Arbuthnot on Coins.

To DIGE'ST. v. a. [digero, digeſtum, Latin.]

1. To diſtribute into various claſſes or repoſitories; to range or diſpoſe methodically.
2. To concoct in the ſtomach, ſo as that the various particles of food may be applied to their proper uſe.

If baſe faults, proceeding on diſtemper,
Shall not be winked at, how ſhall we ſtretch our eye
When capital crimes chew'd, ſwallow'd, and digeſted, Appear? Shakſpeare's Henry V.

Each then has organs to digeſt his food;
One to beget, and one receive, the brood. Prior.

3. To ſoften by heat, as in a boiler, or in a dunghill: a chemical term.
4. To range methodically in the mind; to apply knowledge by meditation to its proper uſe.

Choſen friends, with ſenſe refin'd,
Learning digeſted well. Thomſon

5. To reduce to any plan, ſcheme, or method.

Our play
Leaps o'er the vaunt and firſtlings of thoſe broils,
Ending i' th' middle: ſtarting thence away
To what may be digeſted in a play. Shakſpeare.

6. To receive without loathing or repugnance; not to reject.

Juſt, let us go to dinner.
—Nay, let me prate you while I have a ſtomach.
—No prating then, let it ſerve for table-talk;
Then, howſoe'er thou ſpeak'ſt, 'mong other things
I ſhall digeſt it. Shakſpeare's Merchant of Venice.

The pleaſance of numbers is, that rudeneſs and barbariſm might the better taſte and digeſt the leſſons of civility. Peacham.

7. To receive and enjoy.

Cornwal and Albany,
With my two daughters dowers, digeſt the third.
Shakſpeare.

8. [In chirurgery.] To diſpoſe a wound to generate pus in order to a cure.

To DIGE'ST. v. n. To generate matter, as a wound, and tend to a cure.

DIGE'STER. n. ſ. [from digeſt.]

1. He that digeſts or diſpoſes.
2. He that digeſts or concocts his food.

People that are bilious and fat, rather than lean, are great eaters and ill digeſters. Arbuthnot.

3. A ſtrong veſſel or engine, contrived by M. Papin, wherein to boil, with a very ſtrong heat, any bony ſubſtances, ſo as to reduce them into a fluid ſtate. Quincy.
4. That which cauſes or ſtrengthens the concoctive power.

Rice is of excellent uſe for all illneſſes of the ſtomach, a great reſtorer of health, and a great digeſter. Temple.

DIGE'STIBLE. adj. [from digeſt.] That which is capable of being digeſted or concocted in the ſtomach.

Thoſe medicines that purge by ſtool are, at the firſt, not digeſtible by the ſtomach, and therefore move immediately downwards to the guts.
Bacon's Natural Hiſtory.

DIGE'STION. n. ſ. [from digeſt.]

1. The act of digeſting or concocting food in the ſtomach.

Now good digeſtion wait on appetite,
And health on both. Shakſpeare's Macbeth.

Digeſtion is a fermentation begun, becauſe there are all the requiſites of ſuch a fermentation; heat, air, and motion: but it is not a complete fermentation, becauſe that requires a greater time than the continuance of the aliment in the ſtomach: vegetable putrefaction reſembles very much animal digeſtion. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

Quantity of food cannot be determined by meaſures and weights, or any general Leſſian rule, but muſt vary with the vigour or decays of age or of health, and the uſe or diſuſe of air or of exerciſe, with the changes of appetite; and then, by what every man may find or ſuſpect of the preſent ſtrength or weakneſs of digeſtion. Temple.

Every morſel to a ſatisfied hunger, is only a new labour to a tired digeſtion. South.

2. The preparation of matter by a chemical heat.

We conceive, indeed, that a perfect good concoction, or digeſtion, or maturation of ſome metals, will produce gold. Bacon's Natural Hiſtory.

Did chymick chance the furnaces prepare,
Raiſe all the labour houſes of the air,
And by crude vapours in digeſtion there? Blackmore.

3. Reduction to a plan; the act of methodiſing; the maturation of a deſign.

The digeſtion of the counſels in Sweden is made in ſenate, conſiſting of forty counſellors, who are generally the greateſt men. Temple.

4. The act of diſpoſing a wound to generate matter.
5. The diſpoſition of a wound or ſore to generate matter.

The laſt ſtage of healing, or the diſcharge of matter, is by ſurgeons called digeſtion.
Grany's Surgery.

DIGE'STIVE. adj. [from digeſt.]

1. Having the power to cauſe digeſtion, or to ſtrengthen the ſtomach.

A chiefeſt by mean'ſtuff, or a digeſtive preparation, drawn from ſpecies of individuals, whoſe ſtomachs peculiarly diſſolve ſuch bodies. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

2. Capable by heat to ſoften and ſubdue.

The earth and ſun were in that very ſtate; the one active, piercing, and digeſtive, by its heat; the other paſſive, receptive, and ſtored with materials for ſuch a production. Hale.

3. Methodiſing; adjuſting.

To buſineſs, riper'd by digeſtive thought,
This future rule is into method brought. Dryden.

DIGE'STIVE. n. ſ. [from digeſt.] An application which diſpoſes a wound to generate matter.

I dreſſed it with digeſtives. Wiſem. on Abſceſſes.

DIGE'STURE. n. ſ. Concoction: not uſed.

Neither tie yourſelf always to eat meats of eaſy digeſture; ſuch as veal, ſweetbreads. Harvey.

DI'GGER. n. ſ. [from dig.] One that opens the ground with a ſpade.

When we viſited mines, we have been told by diggers, that even when the ſky ſeemed clear, there would ſuddenly riſe a ſteam ſo thick, that it would put out their candles. Boyle.

To DI'GHT. v. a. [bihtan, to prepare, to regulate, Saxon.]

1. To dreſs; to deck; to bedeck; to embelliſh; to adorn. It ſeems always to ſignify the paſt; the participle paſſive is dight, as dighted in Hudibras is perhaps improper.

Let my due feet never fail
To walk the ſtudious cloiſters pale;
And love the high embowed roof,
With antick pillar, maſſy proof;
And ſtoried windows richly dight,
Caſting a dim religious light. Milton.

Juſt to the proud inſulting laſs
Attyed and dighted Hudibras. Hudibras.

2. To put on.

On his head his dreadful hat he dight,
Which makes him viſible to fight. Hud. Tale.

DI'GIT. n. ſ. [digitus, Latin.]

1. The meaſure of length containing three fourths of an inch.

If the inverted tube of mercury be but twenty-five digits high, or ſomewhat more, the quickſilver will not fall, but remain ſuſpended in the tube, becauſe it cannot preſs the ſubjacent mercury with ſo great a force as doth the incumbent cylinder of the air, reaching thence to the top of the atmoſphere. Boyle's Spring of the Air.

2. The twelfth part of the diameter of the ſun or moon.
3. Any of the numbers expreſſed by ſingle figures; any number to ten: ſo called from counting upon the fingers.

Nor ſecond, the number of ſeven alſo, from conſiderations abſtruſe, have been extolled by moſt, but all or moſt of other digits have been as mythically applauded. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

DI'GITATED. adj. [from digitus, Latin.] Branched out into diviſions like fingers; as a digitated leaf is a leaf compoſed of many ſmall leaves.

For animals manifeſtous, or ſuch as are digitated, or have ſeveral diſtinct members. Grew's Coſm. Sacra.

DIGNIFICA'TION. n. ſ. [from dignify.] Exaltation.

I grant that where a noble and ancient deſcent and merit meet in any man, it is a double dignification of that perſon. Walton's Angler.

To DI'GNIFY. v. a. [from dignus and facio, Latin.]

1. To advance; to prefer; to exalt. Uſed chiefly of the clergy.
2. To honour; to adorn; to give luſtre to; to improve by ſome adventitious excellence, or honourable diſtinction.

Such a day,
So fought, ſo follow'd, and ſo fairly won,
Came not till now to dignify the times
Since Cæſar's fortunes! Shakſpeare's Henry IV.

Not that we think us worthy ſuch a gueſt,
But that your worth will dignify our feaſt.
Ben Jonſon.

No

No turbots dignify my boards;
But gudgeons, flounders, what my Thames affords.
Pope.

DI'GNITARY. n. ſ. [from dignus, Latin.] A clergyman advanced to ſome dignity, to ſome rank above that of a parochial prieſt.

If there be any dignitaries, whoſe preferments are perhaps not liable to the accuſation of ſuperfluity, they may be perſons of ſuperior merit. Swift.

DI'GNITY. n. ſ. [dignitas, Latin.]

1. Rank of elevation.

Angels are not any where ſpoken ſo highly of as our Lord and Saviour Jeſus Chriſt, and are not in dignity equal to him. Hooker.

2. Grandeur of mien; elevation of aſpect.

Some men have a native dignity, which will procure them more regard by a look, than others can obtain by the moſt imperious commands. Clariſſa.

3. Advancement; preferment; high place.

Faſter than ſpring-time ſhow'rs comes thought on thought,
And not a thought but thinks on dignity. Shak.
For thoſe of old,
And theſe late dignities heap'd up to them. Shak.

4. [Among eccleſiaſticks.] By a dignity we underſtand that promotion or preferment to which any juriſdiction is annexed. Ayliffe's Parergon.

5. Maxims; general principles: κυριαι δοξαι.

The ſciences concluding from dignities, and principles known by themſelves, receive not ſatisfaction from probable reaſons, much leſs from bare aſſeverations. Brown.

6. [In aſtrology.] The planet is in dignity when it is in any ſign.

DIGNO'TION. n. ſ. [from dignoſco, Latin.] Diſtinction; diſtinguiſhing mark.

That temperamental dignotions, and conjecture of prevalent humours, may be collected from ſpots in our nails, we are not averſe to concede. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

To DIGRE'SS. v. n. [digreſſus, Latin.]

1. To turn aſide out of the road.

2. To depart from the main deſign of a diſcourſe, or chief tenour of an argument.

In the purſuit of an argument there is hardly room to digreſs into a particular definition, as often as a man varies the ſignification of any term. Locke.

3. To wander; to expatiate.

It ſeemeth (to digreſs no farther) that the Tartarians, ſpreading ſo far, cannot be the Iſraelites. Brerewood.

4. To go out of the right way, or common track; to tranſgreſs; to deviate: not in uſe.

I am come to keep my word,
Though in ſome part am forced to digreſs,
Which at more leiſure I will ſo excuſe
As you ſhall well be ſatisfied. Shakeſpeare.
Thy noble ſhape is but a form of wax,
Digreſſing from the valour of a man. Shakeſpeare.

DIGRE'SSION. n. ſ. [digreſſio, Latin.]

1. A paſſage deviating from the main tenour or deſign of a diſcourſe.

The good man thought ſo much of his late conceived commonwealth, that all other matters were but digreſſions to him. Sidney.
He, ſhe knew, would intermix
Grateful digreſſions, and ſolve high diſputs
With conjugal careſſes. Milton.
Here ſome digreſſion I muſt make, t' accuſe
Thee, my forgetful and ungrateful muſe. Denham.
To content and fill the eye of the underſtanding, the beſt authors ſprinkle their works with pleaſing digreſſions, with which they recreate the minds of their readers. Dryden.

2. Deviation.

The digreſſion of the ſun is not equal; but, near the equinoctial interſections, it is right and greater; near the ſolſtices, more oblique and leſſer. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

DIJUDICA'TION. n. ſ. [dijudicatio, Latin.] Judicial diſtinction.

DIKE. n. ſ. [dic, Saxon; dyk. Erſe.]

1. A channel to receive water.

The dykes are fill'd, and with a roaring ſound
The riſing rivers float the nether ground.
Dryden's Virgil.
The king of dykes! than whom no ſluice of mud
With deeper ſable blots the ſilver flood.
Pope's Dunciad.

2. A mound to hinder inundations.

God, that breaks up the flood-gates of ſo great a deluge, and all the art and induſtry of man is not ſufficient to raiſe up dykes and ramparts againſt it. Cowley.

To DILA'CERATE. v. a. [dilacero, Latin.] To tear; to rend; to force in two.

The infant, at the accompliſhed period, ſtruggling to come forth, dilacerates and breaks thoſe parts which reſtrained him before. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

DILACERA'TION. n. ſ. [from dilaceratio, Latin.] The act of rending in two.

The greateſt ſenſation of pain is by the obſtruction of the ſmall veſſels, and dilaceration of the nervous fibres. Arbuthnot.

To DILA'NIATE. v. a. [dilanio, Latin.] To tear; to rend in pieces.

Rather than they would dilaniate the entrails of their own mother, and expoſe her thereby to be raviſhed, they met half way in a gallant kind. Howel's Eng. Tears.

To DILA'PIDATE. v. n. [dilapido, Latin.] To go to ruin; to fall by decay.

DILAPIDA'TION. n. ſ. [dilapidatio, Latin.] The incumbent's ſuffering the chancel, or any other edifices of his eccleſiaſtical living, to go to ruin or decay, by neglecting to repair the ſame: and it likewiſe extends to his committing, or ſuffering to be committed, any wilful waſte in or upon the glebe-woods, or any other inheritance of the church. Ayliffe's Parergon.
'Tis the duty of all church-wardens to prevent the dilapidations of the chancel and manſion-houſe belonging to the rector or vicar. Ayliffe's Parergon.

DILATABI'LITY. n. ſ. [from dilatable.] The quality of admitting extenſion.

We take notice of the wonderful dilatability or extenſiveneſs of the gullets of ſerpents: I have taken two adult mice out of the ſtomach of an adder, whoſe neck was not bigger than my little finger. Ray.
By this continual contractability and dilatability, by different degrees of heat, the air is kept in a conſtant motion. Arbuthnot.

DILA'TABLE. adj. [from dilate.] Capable of extenſion.

The windpipe divides itſelf into a great number of branches called bronchia: theſe end in ſmall air bladders, dilatable and contractible, capable to be inflated by the admiſſion of air, and to ſubſide at the expulſion of it. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

DILATA'TION. n. ſ. [from dilatatio, Latin.]

1. The act of extending into greater ſpace: oppoſed to contraction.

The motions of the tongue, by contraction and dilatation, are ſo eaſy and ſo ſubtle, that you can hardly conceive or diſtinguiſh them aright. Holder.

2. The ſtate of being extended; the ſtate in which the parts are at more diſtance from each other.

Joy cauſeth a cheerfulneſs and vigour in the eyes; ſinging, leaping, dancing, and ſometimes tears: all theſe are the effects of the dilatation, and coming forth of the ſpirits into the outward parts. Bacon's Natural Hiſtory.
The image of the ſun ſhould be drawn out into an oblong form, either by a dilatation of every ray, or by any other caſual inequality of the refraction. Newton.

To DILA'TE. v. a. [dilato, Latin.]

1. To extend; to ſpread out; to enlarge: oppoſed to contract.

But ye thereby much greater glory gate,
Than had ye ſorted with a prince's peer;
For now your light doth more itſelf dilate,
And in my darkneſs greater doth appear. Spenſer.
Satan alarm'd,
Collecting all his might, dilated ſtood,
Like Teneriff, or Atlas, unremov'd. Milton.
Opener of mine eyes,
Dim erſt; dilated ſpirits, ampler heart,
And growing up to godhead: which for thee
Chiefly I ſought; without thee can deſpiſe. Milt.
Through all the air his ſounding ſtrings dilate
Sorrow, like that which touch'd our hearts of late. Waller.
Diffus'd, it riſes in a higher ſphere;
Dilates its drops, and ſoftens into air. Prior.
I mark the various fury of the winds;
Theſe neither ſeaſons guide, nor order binds:
They now dilate and now contract their force;
Various their ſpeed, but endleſs is their courſe. Prior.
The ſecond refraction would ſpread the rays one way as much as the firſt doth another, and ſo dilate the image in breadth as much as the firſt doth in length. Newton.

2. To relate at large; to tell diffuſely and copiouſly.

But he would not endure that woful theam
For to dilate at large; but urged ſore,
With piercing words, and pitiful implore,
Him haſty to ariſe. Fairy Queen.
I obſerving,
Took once a pliant hour, and found good means
To draw from her a prayer of earneſt heart,
That I would all my pilgrimage dilate,
Whereof by parcels ſhe had ſomething heard,
But not diſtinctively. Shakeſpeare's Othello.

To DILA'TE. v. n.

1. To widen; to grow wide.

His heart dilates and glories in his ſtrength. Addiſon.

2. To ſpeak largely and copiouſly.

It may be behoveful for princes, in matters of grace, to tranſact the ſame publickly, and by themſelves; or their miniſters to dilate upon it, and improve their luſtre, by any addition or eloquence of ſpeech. Clarendon.

DILA'TOR. n. ſ. [from dilate.] That which widens or extends.

The buccinators, or blowers up of the cheeks, and the dilators of the note, are too ſtrong in cholerick people. Arbuthnot.

DI'LATORINESS. n. ſ. [from dilatory.] The quality of being dilatory; ſlowneſs; ſluggiſhneſs.

DI'LATORY. adj. [dilatoire, Fr. dilatorius, Latin.] Tardy; ſlow; given to procraſtination; addicted to delay; ſluggiſh; loitering.

An inferior council, after former tedious ſuits in a higher court, would be but dilatory, and to little purpoſe. Hayward.
What wound did ever heal but by degrees?
Thou know'ſt we work by wit, and not by witchcraft;
And wit depends on dilatory time. Shak. Othello.
Theſe cardinals trifle with me; I abhor
This dilatory ſloth, and tricks of Rome.
Shakeſpeare's Henry VIII.

Dilatory fortune plays the jilt
With the brave, noble, honeſt, gallant man,
To throw herſelf away on fools and knaves. Otway.

A dilatory temper commits innumerable cruelties without deſign. Addiſon's Spectator.

DILE'CTION. n. ſ. [dilectio, Latin.] The act of loving; kindneſs.

So free is Chriſt's dilection, that the grand condition of our felicity is our belief.
Boyle's Seraphic Love.

DILE'MMA. n. ſ. [διλημμα.]

1. An argument equally concluſive by contrary ſuppoſitions. A young rhetorician applied to an old ſophiſt to be taught the art of pleading, and bargained for a certain reward to be paid, when he ſhould gain a cauſe. The maſter ſued for his reward, and the ſcholar endeavoured to elude his claim by a dilemma: If I gain my cauſe, I ſhall withhold your pay, becauſe the judge's award will be againſt you; if I loſe it, I may withhold it, becauſe I ſhall not yet have gained a cauſe. On the contrary, ſays the maſter, if you gain your cauſe, you muſt pay me, becauſe you are to pay me when you gain a cauſe; if you loſe it you muſt pay me, becauſe the judge will award it.

A dilemma, that Morton uſed to raiſe benevolence, ſome called his fork, and ſome his crotch
Bacon's Henry VII.

Hope, whoſe weak being ruin'd is
Like if it ſucceed, and if it miſs,
Whom good or ill does equally confound,
And both the horns of fate's dilemma wound.
Cowley.

2. A difficult or doubtful choice; a vexatious alternative.

A ſtrong dilemma in a deſp'rate caſe!
To act with infamy, or quit the place. Swift.

A dire dilemma; either way I'm ſped;
If foes they write, if friends they read, me dead
Pope.

DI'LIGENCE. n. ſ. [diligentia, Latin.] Induſtry; aſſiduity; conſtancy in buſineſs; continuance of endeavour; unintermitted application; the contrary to idleneſs.

Something, as dim to our internal view,
Is thus perhaps the cauſe of all we do. Pope.

4. Obſtructing the act of viſion; not luminous; ſomewhat dark.

Her face right wond'rous fair did ſeem to be,
That her broad beauty's beam great brightneſs threw
Through the dim ſhade, that all men might it ſee.
Spenſer.

To DIM. v. a. [from the adjective.]

1. To cloud; to darken; to hinder from a full perception of light, and free exerciſe of viſion.

As where the Almighty's lightning brand does light,
It dims the dazed eyen, and daunts the ſenſes quite.
Spenſer's Fairy Queen.

It hath been obſerved by the ancients, that much uſe of Venus doth dim the ſight; and yet eunuchs, which are unable to generate, are nevertheleſs alſo dim ſighted. Bacon.

Every one declares againſt blindneſs, and yet who almoſt is not fond of that which dims his ſight?
Locke.

For thee I dim theſe eyes, and ſtuff this head,
With all ſuch reading as was never read.
Pope's Dunciad.

2. To make leſs bright; to obſcure.

A ſhip that through the ocean wide,
By conduct of ſome ſtar, doth make her way,
When as a ſtorm hath dimm'd her truſty guide,
Out of her courſe doth wander far aſtray. Spenſer.

All or us have cauſe
To wail the dimming of our ſhining ſtar.
Shakeſpeare's Richard III.

Thus while he ſpake, each paſſion dimm'd his face,
Thrice chang'd. Milton.

The principal figure in a picture is like a king among his courtiers, who dims all his attendants.
Dryden.

DIME'NSION. n. ſ. [dimenſio, Latin.] Space contained in any thing; bulk; extent; capacity. It is ſeldom uſed but in the plural. The three dimenſions are length, breadth, and depth.

DIN. n. ſ. [dyn, a noiſe; dynan, to make a noiſe, Sax. dyna, to thunder, Iſlandick.] A loud noiſe; a violent and continued ſound.

And all the way he roared as he went,
That all the foreſt with aſtoniſhment
Thereof did tremble; and the beaſts therein
Fled faſt away from that ſo dreadful din.
Hubberd's Tale.

O, 'twas a din to fright a monſter's ear;
To make an earthquake: ſure, it was the roar
Of a whole herd of lions. Shakeſpeare's Tempeſt.

While the cock with lively din
Scatters the rear of darkneſs thin;
And to the ſtack, or the barn-door,
Stoutly ſtruts his dame before. Milton.

Now night over heav'n
Inducing darkneſs, grateful truce impoſ'd,
And ſilence, on the odious din of war. Milton.

How, while the troubled elements around,
Earth, water, air, the ſtunning din reſound,
Thro' ſtreams of ſmoke and adverſe fire he rides,
While every ſhot is levell'd at his ſides. Swift.

Some independent ideas, of no alliance to one another, are, by education, cuſtom, and the conſtant din of their party, ſo coupled in their minds that they always appear there together. Locke.

To DIN. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To ſtun with noiſe; to haraſs with clamour.

Rather live
To bait theſe for his bread, and din your ears
With hungry cries. Otway's Venice Preſerved.

2. To impreſs with violent and continued noiſe.

What ſhall we do, if his majeſty puts out a proclamation commanding us to take Wood's half-pence? This hath been often dinned in my ears.
Swift.

To DINE. v. n. [diner, Fr.] To eat the chief meal about the middle of the day.

Perhaps ſome merchant hath invited him,
And from the mart he's ſomewhere gone to dine.
Good ſiſter, let us dine, and never fret. Shakeſpeare.

Myſelf, he, and my ſiſter,
To-day did dine together. Shakeſpeare.

He would dine with me the next day. Clarendon.

Thus, of your heroes and brave boys,
With whom old Homer makes ſuch noiſe,
The greateſt actions I can find,
Are, that they did their work and din'd. Prior.

To DINE. v. a. To give a dinner to; to feed.

Bore his reſtoring root in gen'rous wine,
And ſet beſide the door the ſickly ſtock to dine.
Dryden's Virgil.

DIN'TICAL. adj. [dinticus, Lat.] Whirling round; vertiginous.

Some of late have concluded, from ſpots in the ſun, which appear and diſappear again, that beſides the revolution it maketh with its orbe, it hath alſo a dinetical motion, and rolls upon its own poles. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

A ſpherical figure is moſt commodious for the dinetical motion, or revolution upon its own axis. Ray.

DI'NNER. n. ſ. [dîner, French.] The chief meal; the meal eaten about the middle of the day.

Let me not ſtay a jot for dinner;
Go, get it ready. Shakeſpeare's King John.

Before dinner and ſupper, as often as it is convenient, or can be had, let the public prayers [illegible]

church, or some parts of them, be said publicly in the family. Taylor.

The jolly crew, unmindful of the past,
The quarry share, their plenteous dinner haste.
Dryden's Æneid.

DI'NNER-TIME. n. s. [dinner and time.] The time of dining.

At dinner-time,
I pray you, have in mind where we must meet.
Shakespeare.

Then from the mint walks forth the man of rhyme,
Happy to catch me just at dinner-time. Pope.

DINT. n. s. [dynt, Saxon.]

1. A blow; a stroke.

Much daunted with that dint, her sense was daz'd;
Yet, kindling rage, herself she gather'd round.
Spenser.

Neither mainly hope
To be invulnerable in these bright arms,
Though temper'd heav'nly; for that mortal dint,
Save he who reigns above, none can resist. Milton.

2. The mark made by a blow; the cavity remaining after a violent pressure.

He embrac'd her naked body o'er;
And, straining hard the statue, was afraid
His hands had made a dint, and hurt the maid.
Dryden.

3. Violence; force; power.

Now you weep; and, I perceive, you feel
The dint of pity. Shakespeare's Julius Cæsar.

We are to wrest the whole Spanish monarchy out of the hands of the enemy; and, in order to it, to work our way into the heart of his country by dint of arms. Addison.

The dewlapt bull now chases along the plain,
While burning love ferments in ev'ry vein;
His well-arm'd front against his rival aims,
And by the dint of war his mistress claims. Gay.

To DINT. v. a. [from the noun.] To mark with a cavity by a blow, or violent impression.

With greedy force each other both assail,
And strike so fiercely, that they do impress
Deep-dinted furrows in the batter'd mails:
The iron walls to ward their blows were weak and frail. Fairy Queen.

Leave, leave, fair bride, your solitary bone,
No more shall you return to it alone;
It nurseth sadness; and your body's print,
Like to a grave, the yielding down doth dint. Donne.

Deep-dinted wrinkles on her cheeks she draws;
Sunk are her eyes, and toothless are her jaws.
Dryden's Æneid.

DINUMERA'TION. n. s. [dinumeratio, Lat.] The act of numbering out singly.

DIOCE'SAN. n. s. [from diocesis.] A bishop, as he stands related to his own clergy or flock.

As a diocesan you are like to outdo yourself in all other capacities, and exemplify every word of this discourse. South.

I have heard it has been advised by a diocesan to his inferior clergy, that they should read some of the most celebrated sermons printed by others. Tatler.

DI'OCESS. n. s. [diœcesis; a Greek word, compounded of διὰ and οἶκος.] The circuit of every bishop's jurisdiction; for this realm has two divisions, one into shires or counties, in respect of temporal policy; another into dioceses, in respect of jurisdiction ecclesiastical. Cowell.

None ought to be admitted by any bishop, but such as have dwelt and remained in his diocess a convenient time. Whitgift.

We should regard the bishop of Rome as the [illegible] of Jersey and Guernsey do him of Coutances in Normandy; that is, nothing at all, since neither French bishop's refusal to swear unto our king, those Isles were annexed to the diocess of Winchester. Raleigh's Essays.

St. Paul looks upon Titus as advanced to the dignity of a prince, ruler of the church, and intrusted with a large diocess, containing many particular cities, under the immediate government of their respective elders, and those deriving authority from his ordination. South.

DIO'PTRICAL. } n. s. [διόπτομαι.] Af-
DIO'PTRICK. } fording a medium for the sight; assisting the sight in the view of distant objects.

Being excellently well furnished with dioptrical glasses, he had not been able to see the sun spotted. Boyle.

DIO'PTRICKS. n. s. A part of opticks, treating of the different refractions of the light passing through different mediums; as the air, water, glasses, &c. Harris.

DIORTHO'SIS. n. s. [διορθωσις, of διορθόω, to make straight.] A chirurgical operation, by which crooked or distorted members are restored to their primitive and regular shape. Harris.

To DIP. v. a. pret. dipped; particip. dipped, or dipt. [bippan, Saxon; doopen, Dutch.]

1. To immerge; to put into any liquor.

The person to be baptized may be dipped in water; and such an immersion or dipping ought to be made thrice, according to the canon. Ayliffe's Parergon.

Old Corineus compass'd thrice the crew,
And dipp'd an olive-branch in holy dew,
Which thrice he sprinkled round, and thrice aloud
Invok'd the dead, and then dismiss'd the crowd.
Dryden's Æneid.

He turn'd a tyrant in his latter days,
And from the bright meridian where he stood,
Descending, dipp'd his hands in lovers' blood.
Dryden's Fables.

The kindred arts shall in their praise conspire,
One dip the pencil, and one string the lyre. Pope.

Now, on fancy's easy wing convey'd,
The king descended to th' Elysian shade;
There in a dusky vale, where Lethe rolls,
Old Bavius sits to dip poetic souls. Pope's Dunc.

So fishes, rising from the main,
Can soar with moisten'd wings on high;
The moisture dried, they sink again,
And dip their wings again to fly. Swift.

2. To moisten; to wet.

And though not mortal, yet a cold shudd'ring dew
Dips me all o'er, as when the wrath of Jove Speaks thunder. Milton.

3. To be engaged in any affair.

When men are once dipt in, what with the encouragements of sense, custom, facility, and shame of departing from what they have given themselves up to, they go on till they are stifled. L'Estrange.

In Richard's time, I doubt, he was a little dipt in the rebellion of the commons. Dryden's Fables.

4. To engage as a pledge: generally used for the first mortgage.

Be careful still of the main chance, my son;
Put out the principal in trusty hands,
Live on the use, and never dip thy lands.
Dryden's Persius.

To DIP. v. n.

1. To sink; to immerge.

We have snakes in our cups, and in our dishes; and whoever dips too deep will find death in the pot. L'Estrange.

2. To enter; to pierce.

The vulture dipping in Prometheus' side,
His bloody beak with his torn liver dyed.
Granville.

3. To enter slightly into any thing.

When I think all the repetitions are struck out in a copy, I sometimes find more upon dipping in the first volumes. Pope.

4. To take that which comes first; to chuse by chance.

With what ill thoughts of Jove art thou possess'd?
Wouldst thou prefer him to some man? Suppose
I dipp'd among the worst, and Staius chose?
Dryden's Persius.

DI'PCHICK. n. s. [from dip and chick.] The name of a bird.

Dipchick is so named of his diving and littleness. Carew.

DIPE'TALOUS. adj. [δὶς and πέταλον.] Having two flower leaves.

DI'PHTHONG. n. s. [διφθογγος.] A coalition of two vowels to form one sound; as, vain, leaf, Cæsar.

We see how many disputes the simple and ambiguous nature of vowels created among grammarians, and how it has begot the mistake concerning diphthongs: all that are properly so are syllables, and not diphthongs, as is intended to be signified by that word. Holder's Elements of Speech.

Make a diphthong of the second eta and iota, instead of their being two syllables, and the objection is gone. Pope.

DI'PLOE. n. s. The inner plate or lamina of the skull.

DIPLO'MA. n. s. [διπλωμα.] A letter or writing conferring some privilege; so called, because they used formerly to be written on waxed tables, and folded together.

DI'PPER. n. s. [from dip.] One that dips in the water.

DIPPING Needle. n. s. A device which shews a particular property of the magnetick needle, so that, besides its polarity or verticity, which is its direction of altitude, or height above the horizon, when duly poised about an horizontal axis, it will always point to a determined degree of altitude, or elevation above the horizon, in this or that place respectively.

DI'PSAS. n. s. [Latin, from διψάω, to thirst.] A serpent, whose bite produces the sensation of unquenchable thirst.

Scorpion, and asp, and amphisbœna dire,
Cerastes horn'd, hydrus, and ellops drear,
And dipsas. Milton.

DI'PTOTE. n. s. [διπτωσις.] A noun consisting of two cases only. Clark.

DI'PTYCH. n. s. [diptycha, Lat. two leaves folded together.] A register of bishops and martyrs.

The commemoration of saints was made out of the diptychs of the church, as appears by multitudes of places in St. Austin. Stillingfleet.

DIRE. adj. [dirus, Lat.] Dreadful; dismal; mournful; horrible; terrible; evil in a great degree.

Women fight,
To doff their dire distresses. Shakesp. Macbeth.

More by intemperance die
In meats, and drinks, which on the earth shall bring
Diseases dire; of which a monstrous crew
Before thee shall appear. Milton.

Hydras, and gorgons, and chimæras dire.
Milton.

Or what the croſs dire-looking plant ſuſtains,
Or hurtful worm with canker'd venom bites.
Milton.

Dire was the toſſing, deep the groans, deſpair
Tended the ſick. Milton.

Diſcord! dire ſiſter of the ſlaughter'd pow'r,
Small at her birth, but riſing ev'ry hour;
While ſcarce the ſkies her horrid head can bound,
She ſtalks on earth, and ſhakes the world around.
Pope.

DIRE'CT. adj. [directus, Latin.]

1. Straight; not crooked.
2. Not oblique.

The ſhips would move in one and the ſame ſurface; and conſequently muſt needs encounter when they either advance towards one another in direct lines, or meet in the interſection of croſs lines.
Bentley.

3. [In aſtronomy.] Appearing to an eye on earth to move progreſſively through the zodiac; not retrograde.

Two geomantick figures were diſplay'd
Above his head, a warrior and a maid,
One when direct, and one when retrograde.
Dryden's Fables.

4. Not collateral, as the grandſon ſucceeds his grandſire in a direct line.
5. Apparently tending to ſome end, as in a ſtraight line.

Such was as then the ſtate of the king, as it was no time by direct means to ſeek her. And ſuch was the ſtate of his captivated will, as he would delay no time of ſeeking her. Sidney.

He that does this, will be able to caſt off all that is ſuperfluous: he will ſee what is pertinent, what coherent, what is direct to, what ſlides by, the queſtion. Locke.

6. Open; not ambiguous.

There be, that are in nature faithful and ſincere, and plain and direct, not crafty and involved.
Bacon.

7. Plain; expreſs.

He no where, that I know, ſays it in direct words. Locke.

It is not in man that walketh to direct his ſteps.
Jer. x. 23.

Wiſdom is profitable to direct. Eccluſ. x. 10.

All that is in a man's power, is to mind what the ideas are that take their turns in his underſtanding; or elſe to direct and ſort, and call in ſuch as he deſires. Locke.

4. To preſcribe certain meaſure; to mark out a certain courſe.

He directeth it under the whole heavens, and his lightning unto the ends of the earth.
Job xxxvii. 3.

5. To order; to command: to direct is a ſofter term than to command.

DIRE'CTER. n. ſ. [director, Latin.]

1. One that directs; one that preſcribes.
2. An inſtrument that ſerves to guide any manual operation.

DIRE'CTION. n. ſ. [directio, Latin.]

1. Aim at a certain point.

Theſe men's opinions are not the product of judgment, or the conſequence of reaſon; but the effects of chance and hazard, of a mind floating at all adventures, without choice, and without direction. Locke.

The direction of good works to a good end, is the only principle that diſtinguiſhes charity.
Sanderſon.

2. Motion impreſſed by a certain impulſe.

No particle of matter, nor any combination of particles, that is, no body, can either move of itſelf, or of itſelf alter the direction of its motion.
Cheyne.

3. Order; command; preſcription.

From the counſel that St. Jerome giveth Læta, of taking heed how ſhe read the apocrypha; as alſo by the help of other learned men's judgments, delivered in like caſe, we may take direction.
Hooker.

Ev'n now
I put myſelf to thy direction. Shakeſp. Macbeth.

The nobles of the people digged it, by the direction of the law-giver. Numb. xxi. 18.

King Charles.

General directions for ſcholaſtic diſputers, is, never to diſpute upon mere trifles. Watts.

4. Regularity; adjuſtment.

All nature is but art unknown to thee;
All chance, direction which thou canſt not ſee.
Pope.

DIRE'CTIVE. n. ſ. [from direct.]

1. Having the power of direction.

A law therefore, generally taken, is a directive rule unto goodneſs of operation. Hooker.

A power of command there is without all queſtion, though there be ſome doubt in what faculty this command doth principally reſide, whether in the will or the underſtanding. The true reſolution is, that the directive command for counſel is in the underſtanding; and the applicative command, or empire, for putting in execution of what is directed, is in the will. Bramhall againſt Hobbes.

On the directive powers of the former, and the regularity of the latter, whereby it is capable of direction, depends the generation of all bodies.
Grew.

2. Informing; ſhewing the way.

Nor viſited by one directive ray.
From cottage ſtreaming, or from airy hall.
Thomſon.

DIRE'CTLY. adv. [from direct.]

1. In a ſtraight line; rectilineally.

The more a body is nearer to the eyes, and the more directly it is oppoſed to them, the more it is enlightened; becauſe the light languiſhes and leſſens, the farther it removes from its proper ſource.
Dryden's Dufreſnoy.

There was no other place aſſigned to any of this matter, than that whereunto its own gravity bore it, which was only directly downwards, whereby it obtained that place in the globe which was juſt underneath. Woodward.

If the refracted ray be returned directly back to the point of incidence, it ſhall be refracted by the incident ray. Newton's Opticks.

2. Immediately; apparently; without circumlocution; without any long train of conſequence.

Infidels, being clean without the church, deny directly, and utterly reject, the very principles of Chriſtianity, which hereticks embrace erroneouſly by miſconſtruction. Hooker.

No man hath hitherto been ſo impious, as plainly and directly to condemn prayer. Hooker.

By aſſerting the ſcripture to be the canon of our faith, I have unavoidably created to myſelf enemies in the papiſts directly, becauſe they have kept the ſcripture from us what they could.
Dryd. Pref. to Religio Laici.

His work directly tends to raiſe ſentiments of honour and virtue in his readers.
Addiſon's Freeholder.

No reaſon can be aſſigned, why it is beſt for the world that God Almighty hath abſolute power, which doth not directly prove that no mortal man ſhould have the like. Swift.

DIRECTNESS. n. ſ. [from direct.] Straightneſs; tendency to any point by the neareſt way.

They argued from celeſtial cauſes only, the conſtant vicinity of the ſun, and the directneſs of his rays; never ſuſpecting that the body of the earth had ſo great an efficiency in the changes of the air.
Bentley.

DIRE'CTOR. n. ſ. [director, Latin.]

1. One that has authority over others; a ſuperintendent; one that has the general management of a deſign or work.

Himſelf ſtood director over them, with nodding or ſtamping, ſhewing he did like or miſlike thoſe things he did not underſtand. Sidney.

Pope.

6. An inſtrument in ſurgery, by which the hand is guided in its operation.

The manner of opening with a knife, is by ſliding it on a director, the groove of which prevents its being miſguided. Sharp's Surgery.

DIRE'CTORY. n. ſ. [from director.] The book which the factious preachers publiſhed in the rebellion for the direction of their ſect in acts of worſhip.

As to the ordinance concerning the directory, we cannot conſent to the taking away of the book of common prayer. Oxford Reaſons againſt the Cov.

DI'REFUL. adj. [This word is frequent among the poets, but has been cenſured as not analogical; all other words compounded with full conſiſting of a ſubſtantive and full; as, dreadful, or full of dread; joyful, or full of joy.] Dire; dreadful; diſmal.

Point of ſpear it never pierced would,
Ne dint of direful ſword divide the ſubſtance could.
Fairy Queen.

But yet at laſt, whereas the direful fiend
She ſaw not ſtir, off ſhaking vain affright,
She nigher drew, and ſaw that joyous end;
Then God ſhe pray'd, and thank'd her faithful knight. Fairy Queen.

Direful hap betide that hated wretch
That makes us wretched by the death of thee.
Shakeſpeare.

The voice of God himſelf ſpeaks in the heart of men, whether they underſtand it or no; and by ſecret intimations gives the ſinner a foretaſte of that direful cup, which he is like to drink more deeply of hereafter. South.

I cure'd the direful author of my woes:
'Twas told again, and thence my ruin roſe.
Dryden.

Achilles' wrath, to Greeks the direful ſpring
Of woes unnumber'd, heavenly goddeſs! ſing. Pope.

Direneſs, familiar to my ſlaught'rous thoughts,
Cannot once ſtart me. Shakeſpeare's Macbeth.

DIRE'PTION. n. ſ. [direptio, Latin.] The act of plundering.

DIRGE. [This is not a contraction of the Latin dirige, in the popish hymn, Dirige gressus meos, as some pretend; but from the Teutonic dyrke, laudare, to praise and extol. Whence it is possible their dyrke, and our dirge, was a laudatory song to commemorate and applaud the dead. Verstegan. Bacon apparently derives it from dirige.] A mournful ditty; a song of lamentation.

Th' imperial jointress of this warlike state
Have we, as 'twere, with a defeated joy,
With mirth in funeral, and with dirge in marriage,
In equal scale weighing delight and dole,
Taken to wife. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

Meanwhile the body of Richard, after many indignities and reproaches, the dirges and obsequies of the common people towards tyrants, was obscurely buried. Bacon.

You from above shall hear each day
One dirge dispatch'd unto your clay;
These your own anthems shall become,
Your lasting epicedium. Sandys.

All due measures of her mourning kept,
Did office at the dirge, and by infection wept. Dryden.

DI'RIGENT. adj. [dirigens, Latin.] The dirigent line in geometry is that along which the line describent is carried in the generation of any figure. Harris.

White.

Whilſt the champion, with redoubled might,
Strikes home the jav'lin, his retiring foe
Shrinks from the wound, and diſappoints the blow.
Addiſon.

There's nothing like ſurpriſing the rogues: how will they be diſappointed, when they hear that thou haſt prevented their revenge!
Arbuthnot's Hiſtory of John Bull.

We are not only tortured by the reproaches which are offered us, but are diſappointed by the ſilence of men when it is unexpected, and humbled even by their praiſes.
Addiſon.

2. It has of before the thing loſt by diſappointment.

The Janizaries, diſappointed by the baſſas of the ſpoil, received of the bounty of Solyman a great largeſs.
Knolles.

DISAPPOI'NTMENT. n. ſ. [from diſappoint.] Defeat of hopes; miſcarriage of expectations.

It is impoſſible for us to know what are calamities, and what are bleſſings. How many accidents have paſſed for misfortunes, which have turned to the welfare and proſperity of the perſons in whoſe lot they have fallen! How many diſappointments have, in their conſequences, ſaved a man from ruin!
Spectator.

If we hope for things, of which we have not thoroughly conſidered the value, our diſappointment will be greater than our pleaſure in the fruition of them.
Addiſon's Spectator.

DISAPPROBA'TION. n. ſ. [diſ and approbation.] Cenſure; condemnation; expreſſion of diſlike.

He was obliged to publiſh his letters, to ſhew his diſapprobation of the publiſhing of others.
Pope.

To DISAPPRO'VE. v. a. [deſapprouver, Fr.]

Diſband, and wand'ring each his ſeveral way
Purſues.
Milton.

The common ſoldiers, and inferior officers, ſhould be fully paid upon their diſbanding.
Clarend.

Were it not for ſome ſmall remainders of piety and virtue, which are yet here ſcattered among mankind, human ſociety would in a ſhort ſpace diſband and run into confuſion, and the earth would grow wild and become a foreſt.
Tillotſon.

2. To be diſſolved.

While rocks ſtand,
And rivers ſtir, thou canſt not ſhrink or quail;
Yea, when both rocks and all things ſhall diſband,
Then ſhalt thou be my rock and tower.
Herb.

The goddeſs, with a diſcontented air,
Seems to reject him, though ſhe grants his pray'r. Pope.

DISCONTE'NTEDNESS. n. ſ. [from diſcontented.] Uneaſineſs; want of eaſe; diſſatisfaction.

A beautiful buſt of Alexander the Great caſts up his face to heaven with a noble air of grief, or diſcontentedneſs, in his looks. Addiſon's Travels.

DISCONTE'NTMENT. n. ſ. [from diſcontent.] The ſtate of being diſcontented; uneaſineſs.

Theſe are the vices that fill them with general diſcontentment, as though the boſom of that famous church, wherein they live, were more noiſome than any dungeon. Hooker.

The politick and artificial nouriſhing and entertaining of hopes, and carrying men from hopes to hopes, is one of the beſt antidotes againſt the poiſon of diſcontentments. Bacon.

DISCONTI'NUANCE. n. ſ. [from diſcontinue.]

1. Want of coheſion of parts; want of union of one part with another; diſruption.

The ſtillicides of water, if there be enough to follow, will draw themſelves into a ſmall thread, becauſe they will not diſcontinue; but if there be no remedy, then they caſt themſelves into round drops, which is the figure that ſaveth the body moſt from diſcontinuance. Bacon's Natural Hiſtory.

2. Ceſſation; intermiſſion.

Let us conſider whether our approaches to him are ſweet and refreſhing, and if we are uneaſy under any long diſcontinuance of our converſation with him. Atterbury.

3. [In the common law.] An interruption or breaking off; as diſcontinuance of poſſeſſion, or diſcontinuance of proceſs. The effect of diſcontinuance of poſſeſſion is, that a man may not enter upon his own land or tenement alienated, whatſoever his right be unto it, or by his own authority; but muſt ſeek to recover poſſeſſion by law. The effect of diſcontinuance of plea is, that the inſtance may not be taken up again, but by a new writ to begin the ſuit afreſh. Cowell.

DISCONTINUA'TION. n. ſ. [from diſcontinue.] Diſruption of continuity; breach of union of parts; diſruption; ſeparation.

Upon any diſcontinuation of parts, made either by bubbles, or by ſhaking the glaſs, the whole mercury falls. Newton.

To DISCONTI'NUE. v. n. [diſcontinuer, French.]

1. To loſe the coheſion of parts; to ſuffer ſeparation or diſruption of ſubſtance.

All bodies, ductile and tenſile, as metals, that will be drawn into wires; wool and tow, that will be drawn into yarn, or thread; have in them the appetite of not diſcontinuing ſtrong, which maketh them follow the force that pulleth them out, and yet ſo as not to diſcontinue or forſake their own body. Bacon.

2. To loſe an eſtabliſhed or preſcriptive cuſtom or right.

Thyſelf ſhalt diſcontinue from thine heritage that I gave thee, and I will cauſe thee to ſerve thine enemies. Jer.

To DISCONTI'NUE. v. a.

Above a twelvemonth. Shakeſpeare.

Examine thy cuſtoms of diet, ſleep, exerciſe, apparel, and the like; and try, in any thou ſhalt judge hurtful, to diſcontinue it by little and little; but ſo, as if thou find any inconvenience by the change, thou come back to it again. Bacon.

2. To break off; to interrupt.

There is that property, in all letters, of aptneſs to be conjoined in ſyllables and words, through the voluble motions of the organs from one ſtop or figure to another, that they modify and diſcriminate the voice, without appearing to diſcontinue it. Holder's Elements of Speech.

DISCONTINU'ITY. n. ſ. [diſ and continuity.] Diſunity of parts; want of coheſion.

That diſcontinuity of parts is the principal cauſe of the opacity of bodies, will appear by conſidering that opaque ſubſtances become tranſparent by filling their pores with any ſubſtance of equal, or almoſt equal, denſity with their parts. Newton.

DISCONVE'NIENCE. n. ſ. [diſ and convenience.] Incongruity; diſagreement; oppoſition of nature.

Fear ariſeth many times out of natural antipathies of nature; but, in theſe diſconveniences of nature, deliberation hath no place at all. Bramhall's Anſwer to Hobbes.

DI'SCORD. n. ſ. [diſcordia, Latin.]

1. Diſagreement; oppoſition; mutual anger; reciprocal oppugnancy.

See what a ſcourge is laid upon your hate,
That heav'n finds means to kill your joys with love!
And I, for winking at your diſcords too,
Have loſt a brace of kinſmen. Shakeſpeare's Romeo and Juliet.

He is a falſe witneſs that ſpeaketh lies, and that ſoweth diſcord among brethren. Proverbs.

2. Difference or contrariety of qualities, particularly of ſounds.

Take but degree away, untune that ſtring,
And hark what diſcord follows; each thing meets
In mere oppugnancy. Shakeſp. Troil. and Creſſ.

Diſcord, like that of muſic's various parts,
Diſcord that makes the harmony of hearts;

Diſcord,

Discord, that only this dispute shall bring,
Who best shall love the duke and serve the king.
Dryden.

All nature is but art unknown to thee;
All chance, direction which thou canst not see;
All discord, harmony not understood;
All partial evil, universal good. Pope.

3. [In music.] Sounds not of themselves pleasing, but necessary to be mixed with others.

It is found alone that doth immediately and incorporeally affect most; this is most manifest in music, and concords and discords in music: for all sounds, whether they be sharp or flat, if they be sweet, have a roundness and equality; and if they be harsh, are unequal: for a discord itself is but a harshness of divers sounds meeting. Bacon.

It is the lark that sings so out of tune,
Straining harsh discords and unpleasing sharps.
Shakespeare.

How doth music amaze us, when of discords she maketh the sweetest harmony! Peacham.

To DI'SCORD. v. n. [discordo, Latin.] To disagree; not to suit with.

Sounds do disturb and alter the one the other; sometimes the one drowning the other, and making it not heard; sometimes the one jarring and discording with the other, and making a confusion. Bacon.

Gods! how my soul is mov'd with just disdain! Pope's Odyssey.

Disda'infeul. adj. [disdain and full.] Contemptuous; haughtily scornful; indignant.

There will come a time when three words, uttered with charity and meekness, shall receive a far more blessed reward, than three thousand volumes, written with disdainful sharpness of wit. Hooker.

The queen is obstinate,
Stubborn to justice, apt t' accuse it,
Disdainful to be tried by't. Shakespeare.

Seek through this grove;
A sweet Athenian lady is in love
With a disdainful youth: anoint his eyes;
But do it when the next thing he espies
Shall be the lady. Shakespeare.

But those I can accuse, I can forgive:
By any disdainful silence let them live. Dryden.

The disdainful soul came rushing through the wound. Dryden.

Disda'infully. adv. [from disdainful.] Contemptuously; with haughty scorn; with indignation.

Either greet him not,
Or else disdainfully, which shall shake him more. Shakespeare.

It is not to insult and domineer, to look disdainfully, and revile imperiously, that procures esteem from any one. South.

Disda'infulness. n. s. [from disdainful.] Contempt; contemptuousness; haughty scorn.

Can I forget, when they in prison placing her,
With swelling heart, in spite and due disdainfulness,
She lay for dead, till I help'd with unlacing her. Sidney.

A proud disdainfulness of other men. Aicham.

Disea'se. n. s. [dis and ease.] Distemper; malady; sickness; morbid state.

That seems disgracious in the city's eye. Shakesp.

To DISGUI'SE. v. a. [deguiser, Fr. dis and guise.]

1. To conceal by an unusual dress.

How might we disguise him?

——Alas! I know not: there is no woman's gown big enough for him.

Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.

Disguis'd he came, but those his children dear
Their parent soon discern'd through his disguise.
Milton.

2. To hide by a counterfeit appearance; to cloak by a false shew: as, he disguised his anger.

3. To disfigure; to change the form.

They saw the facts, which too well they knew,
Though then disgur'd in death, and smear'd all o'er
With filth obscene, and dropping putrid gore.
Dryden's Æneid.

More dutcous at her call,
Than at Circean call the herd disguis'd. Milton.

Ulysses wakes, not knowing the place where he was; because Minerva made all things appear in a disguised view. Pope.

4. To deform by liquor: a low term.

I have just left the right worshipful, and his myrmidons, about a sneaker of five gallons: the whole magistracy was pretty well disguised before I gave them the slip. Spectator.

DISGUI'SE. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A dress contrived to conceal the person that wears it.

They generally act in a disguise themselves, and therefore mistake all outward show and appearances for hypocrisy in others. Addison.

Since I in Arcite cannot Arcite find,
The world may search in vain with all their eyes.
But never penetrate through this disguise.
Dryden's Fables.

2. A false appearance; counterfeit show.

Hence guilty joys, distastes, surmises,
False oaths, false tears, deceits, disguises. Pope.

3. Disorder by drink.

You see we've burnt our cheeks; and mine own tongue
Splits what it speaks: the wild disguise hath almost Antickt us. Shakesp. Antony and Cleopatra.

DISGUI'SEMENT. n. s. [From disguise.] Dress of concealment.

Under that disguisement I should find opportunity to reveal myself to the owner of my heart. Sidney.

The marquis thought best to dismask his beard, and told him, that he was going covertly to take a secret view of the forwardness of his majesty's fleet: this did somewhat handsomely heal the disguisement. Wotton.

DISGUI'SER. n. s. [from disguise.]

1. One that puts on a disguise.

I hope he is grown more disengaged from his intentness on his own affairs, which is quite the reverse to you, unless you are a very dexterous disguiser. Swift.

2. One that conceals another by a disguise; one that disfigures.

Death's a great disguiser. Shakespeare.

DISGU'ST. n. s. [degout, French.]

1. Aversion of the palate from any thing.

2. Ill humour; malevolence; offence conceived.

The manner of doing is of more consequence than the thing done, and upon that depends the satisfaction or disgust wherewith it is received. Locke.

Thence dark disgust and hatred, winding wiles,
Coward deceit, and ruffian violence. Thomson.

To DISGU'ST. v. a. [degouter, Fr. disgusto, Latin.]

1. To raise aversion in the stomach; to distaste.

2. To strike with dislike; to offend. It is variously constructed with at or with.

3. To produce aversion: with from.

What disgusts me from having to do with ordinary jobbers, is, that they have no conscience. Swift.

DISGU'STFUL. adj. [disgust and full.] Nauseous; that which causes aversion.

I have finished the most disgustful task that ever I undertook. Swift.

DISH. n. s. [bisc, Sax. dysc, Erse; discus, Latin.]

1. A broad wide vessel, in which food is served up at the table.

Or these he murders one; he boils the flesh,
And lays the mangled morsels in a dish. Dryden.

I saw among the ruins an old heathen altar, with this particularity in it, that it is hollowed like a dish at one end; but it was not this end, on which the sacrifice was laid. Addison.

2. A deep hollow vessel for liquid food.

Who would rob a hermit of his weeds,
His few books, or his beads, or maple-dish;
Or do his grey hairs any violence? Milton.

A ladle for our silver dish
Is what I want, is what I wish. Prior.

3. The meat served in a dish; any particular kind of food.

I have here a dish of doves, that I would bestow upon your worship. Shakesp. Merch. of Venice.

Let's kill him boldly, but not wrathfully;
Let's carve him as a dish fit for the gods,
Not hew him as a carcass fit for hounds.
Shakespeare's Julius Cæsar.

The contract you pretend with that base wretch,
One bred of alms and foster'd with cold dishes,
With scraps o' th' court; it is no contract, none.
Shakespeare.

'Tis not the meat, but 'tis the appetite,
Makes eating a delight;
And if I like one dish
More than another, that a pheasant is. Suckling.

The earth would have been deprived of a most excellent and wholesome fare, and very many delicious dishes that we have the use and benefit of. Woodward.

Many people would, with reason, prefer the griping of an hungry belly, to those dishes which are a feast to others. Locke.

4. A kind of measure among the tinners.

They measure block-tin by the dish, which containeth a gallon. Carew.

To DISH. v. a. [from the noun.] To serve in a dish; to send up to table.

For conspiracy,
I know not how it tastes, though it be dish'd
For me to try. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

DISHABI'LLE. n. s. Undress; loose dress.

A woman, who would preserve a lover's respect to her person, will be careful of her appearance before him when in dishabille. Clarissa.

To DISHA'BIT. v. a. [This word I have found only in Shakespeare.] To throw out of place; to drive from their habitation.

But for our approach those sleeping stones,
By the compulsion of their ordinance,
By this time from their fixed beds of time
Had been dishabited, and wide havock made.
Shakespeare's King Lear.

DISHA'RMONY. n. s. [dis and harmony.] Contrariety to harmony.

To DISHEA'RTEN. v. a. [dis and hearten.] To discourage; to deject; to terrify; to depress.

To dishearten with fearful sentences, as though salvation could hardly be hoped for, is not to be consonant with Christian charity. Hooker.

Be not disheartened then, nor cloud those looks
That wont to be more cheerful and serene. Milton.

Yet neither thus disheartened nor dismayed,
The time prepared I waited. Milton.

It is a consideration that might dishearten those who are engaged against the common adversaries, that they promise themselves as much from the folly of enemies, as from the power of their friends. Sprat.

Men cannot say, that the greatness of an evil and danger is an encouragement to men to run upon it; and that the greatness of any good and happiness ought in reason to dishearten men from the pursuit of it. Tillotson.

A true christian fervour is more than the alliances of our potent friends, or even the fears of our disheartened enemies. Atterbury.

DISHE'RISON. n. s. [dis and heriyan.] The act of debarring from inheritance.

To DISHE'RIT. v. a. [dis and inherit.] To cut off from hereditary succession; to debar from an inheritance.

He tries to restore to their rightful heritage such good old English words as have been long time out of use, almost disherited. Spenser.

Not how the Dryads and the woodland train,
Disherited, ran howling o'er the plain. Dryd. Fab.

To DISHE'VEL. v. a. [decheveler, French.] To spread the hair disorderly; to throw the hair of a woman negligently about her head. It is not often used but in the passive participle.

A gentle lad, all alone
With garments rent and hair dishevelled,
Wringing her hands, and making piteous moan.
Spenser.

After followed great numbers of women weeping with dishevelled hair, scratching their faces, and tearing themselves, after the manner of the country. Knolles.

A troop of Trojans mix'd with them appear,
And mourning matrons with dishevell'd hair.
Dryden's Æneid.

The flames, involv'd in smoke
Of incense, from the sacred altar broke,
Caught her dishevell'd hair and rich attire.
Dryden's Æneid.

You

You this morn beheld his ardent eyes,
Saw his arm lock'd in her dishevell'd hair. Smith.

DI'SHING. adj. [from dish.] Concave: a cant term among artificers.

For the form of the wheels, some make them more dishing, as they call it, than others; that is, more concave, by setting off the spokes and fellies more outwards. Mortimer.

DISHO'NEST. adj. [dis and honest.]

1. Void of probity; void of faith; faithless; wicked; fraudulent.

Justice then was neither blind to discern, nor lame to execute. It was not subject to be imposed upon by a deluded fancy, nor yet to be bribed by a glozing appetite, for an utile or jucundum to turn the balance to a false or dishonest sentence. South.

He lays it down as a principle, that right and wrong, honest and dishonest, are defined only by laws, and not by nature. Locke.

2. Unchaste; lewd.

To-morrow will we be married.—I do desire it with all my heart; and I hope it is no dishonest desire, to desire to be a woman of the world. Shakespeare's As you like it.

3. Disgraced; dishonoured.

Dishonest with lopp'd arms the youth appears,
Spoil'd of his nose, and shorten'd of his ears. Dryden.

4. Disgraceful; ignominious. These two senses are scarcely English, being borrowed from the Latin idiom.

She saw her sons with purple death expire,
Her facile comforts involv'd in rolling fire;
A dreadful series of intestine wars,
Inglorious triumphs, and dishonest scars. Pope.

DISHO'NESTLY. adv. [from dishonest.]

1. Without faith; without probity; faithlessly; wickedly.

I protest he had the chain of me,
Though most dishonestly he doth deny it. Shakespeare.

2. Lewdly; wantonly; unchastely.

A wise daughter shall bring an inheritance to her husband, but she that liveth dishonestly is her father's heaviness. Ecclus. xxii. 4.

DISHO'NESTY. n. s. [from dishonest.]

1. Want of probity; faithlessness; violation of trust.

Their fortune depends upon their credit, and a stain of open public dishonesty must be to their disadvantage. Swift.

2. Unchastity; incontinence; lewdness.

Mrs. Ford, the honest woman, the modest wife, the virtuous creature, that hath the jealous fool to her husband! I suspect without cause, mistress, do I?—Heaven be my witness you do, if you suspect me in any dishonesty. Shakespeare.

DISHO'NOUR. n. s. [dis and honour.]

1. Reproach; disgrace; ignominy.

Let not my jealousies be your dishonours,
But mine own safeties. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

He was pleased to own Lazarus even in the dishonours of the grave, and vouchsafed him, in that despicable condition, the glorious title of his friend. Boyle's Seraphic Love.

Take him for your husband and your lord;
'Tis no dishonour to confer your grace
On one descended from a royal race. Dryd. Fables.

2. Reproach uttered; censure; report of infamy.

So good, that no tongue could ever
Pronounce dishonour of her; by my life
She never knew harm-doing. Shakesp. Henry VIII

To DISHO'NOUR. v. a. [dis and honour.]

1. To disgrace; to bring shame upon; to blast with infamy.

It is no vicious blot, murther, or foulness,
No unchaste action, or dishonour'd step,
That hath depriv'd me of your grace and favour. Shakespeare.

This no more dishonours you at all,
Than to take in a town with gentle words,
Which else would put you to your fortune. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

A woman that honoureth her husband, shall be judged wise of all: but she that dishonoureth him in her pride, shall be counted ungodly of all. Eccl. xxvi. 26.

We are not so much to strain ourselves to make those virtues appear in us which really we have not, as to avoid those imperfections which may dishonour us. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

2. To violate chastity.

3. To treat with indignity.

One glimpse of glory to my issue give,
Grac'd for the little time he has to live:
Dishonour'd by the king of men he stands;
His rightful prize is ravish'd from his hands. Dryden's Iliad.

DISHO'NOURABLE. adj. [from dishonour.]

1. Shameful; reproachful; ignominious.

He did dishonourable find
Those articles which did our state decrease. Dan.

2. Being in a state of neglect or disesteem.

He that is honoured in poverty, how much more in riches? and he that is dishonourable in riches, how much more in poverty? Ecclus. x. 31.

DISHO'NOURER. n. s. [from dishonour.]

1. One that treats another with indignity.

Preaching how meritorious with the gods
It would be, to ensnare an irreligious
Dishonourer of Dagon. Milton.

2. A violator of chastity.

To DISHO'RN. v. a. [dis and horn.] To strip of horns.

We'll dishorn the spirit,
And mock him home to Windsor. Shakespeare.

DISHU'MOUR. n. s. [dis and humour.] Peevishness; ill humour; uneasy state of mind.

Speaking impatiently to servants, or any thing that betrays inattention or dishumour, are also criminal. Spectator.

DISIMPRO'VEMENT. n. s. [dis and improvement.] Reduction from a better to a worse state; the contrary to melioration; the contrary to improvement.

The final issue of the matter would be, an utter neglect and disimprovement of the earth. Norris.

I cannot see how this kingdom is at any height of improvement, while four parts in five of the plantations, for thirty years past, have been real disimprovements. Swift.

To DISINCA'RCERATE. v. a. [dis and incarcerate.] To set at liberty; to free from prison.

The arsenical bodies being now coagulated, and kindled into flaming atoms, require dry and warm air, to open the earth for to disincarcerate the same venene bodies. Harvey.

DISINCLINA'TION. n. s. [from disincline.] Want of affection; slight; dislike; ill will not heightened to aversion.

Disappointment gave him a disinclination to the fair sex, for whom he does ever after all the respect possible. Arbuthnot and Pope.

To DISINCLI'NE. v. a. [dis and incline.] To produce dislike to; to make disaffected; to alienate affection from.

They were careful to keep up the fears and apprehensions in the people of dangers and designs, and to disincline them from any reverence or affection to the queen, whom they began every day more implacably to hate, and consequently to disoblige. Clarendon.

DISINGENU'ITY. n. s. [from disingenuous.] Meanness of artifice; unfairness.

They contract a habit of ill-nature and disingenuity necessary to their affairs, and the temper of those upon whom they are to work. Clarendon.

DISINGE'NUOUS. adj. [dis and ingenuous.] Unfair; meanly artful; viciously subtle; sly; cunning; illiberal; unbecoming a gentleman; crafty.

'Tis disingenuous to accuse our age
Of idleness, who all our pow'rs engage
In the same studies, the same course to hold,
Nor think our reason for new arts too old. Denham.

It was a disingenuous way of proceeding, to oppose a judgment of charity concerning the character, to a judgment of reason concerning the nature of actions. Stirling just.

There cannot be any thing so disingenuous and misbecoming any rational creature, as not to yield to plain reason, and the conviction of clear arguments. Locke.

DISINGE'NUOUSLY. adv. [from disingenuous.] In a disingenuous manner.

DISINGE'NUOUSNESS. n. s. [from disingenuous.] Mean subtility; unfairness; low craft.

I might press them with the unreasonableness, the disingenuousness of embracing a profession to which their own hearts have an inward reluctance. Government of the Tongue.

DISINHE'RISON. n. s. [dis and inherit.]

1. The act of cutting off from any hereditary succession; the act of disinheriting.

If he stood upon his own title of the house of Lancaster, inherent in his person, he knew it was a title condemned by parliament, and generally prejudged in the common opinion of the realm, that it tended directly to the disinherison of the line of York. Bacon's Henry VII.

The chief minister of the revenue was obliged to prevent, and even oppose, such disinherisons. Clarend.

2. The state of being cut off from an hereditary right.

In respect of the effects and evil consequences, the adultery of the woman is worse, as bringing bastardy into a family, and disinherisons of great injuries to the lawful children. Taylor.

To DISINHE'RIT. v. a. [dis and inherit.] To cut off from an hereditary right; to deprive of an inheritance.

Is it then just with us to disinherit
The unborn nephews for the father's fault? Davies.

Unmuffle, ye faint stars; and thou, fair moon,
Stoop thy pale visage through an amber cloud,
And disinherit chaos that reigns here
In double night of darkness, and of slander. Milton.

Posterity stands curs'd: fair patrimony
That I must leave ye, sons! O were I able
To waste it all myself, and leave ye none;
So disinherited, how would ye bless
Me, now your curse! Milton.

Of how fair a portion Adam disinherited his whole posterity by one single prevarication! South.

To DISINTE'R. v. a. [from dis and inter.] To unbury; to take as out of the grave.

The philosopher, the saint, or the hero, the wise, the good, or the great man, very often lie hid and concealed in a plebeian, which a proper education might have disinterred. Addison.

DISI'NTERESSED. n. s. [dis, and interesse, French. It is written disinterested by those who derive it immediately from interest, and I think more properly.] Without regard to private advantage; not biassed by particular views; impartial.

Not that tradition's parts are useless here,
When general, old, disinterested, and clear. Dryden.

DI'SINTERESSMENT. n. s. [dis, and interessement, French.] Disregard to private advantage; disinterest; disinterestedness. This word, like charges in the same sentence, is merely Gallick.

He has managed some of the charges of the kingdom kingdom with known ability, and laid them down with entire disinteressment. Prior's Postscript.

DISI'NTEREST. n. f. [dis and interest.]

1. What is contrary to one's with or prosperity; that which any one is concerned to prevent.

They judge it the great disinterest to Rome. Glanville.

2. Indifference to profit; superiority to regards of private advantage.

DISI'NTERESTED. adj. [from disinterest.]

1. Superior to regard of private advantage; not influenced by private profit.

As disinterested as you appear to the world, no man is more in the power of that prevailing favourite passion than yourself. Swift.

2. Without any concern in an affair; without fear or hope.

DISI'NTERESTEDLY. adv. [from disinterested.] In a disinterested manner.

DISI'NTERESTEDNESS. n. f. [from disinterested.] Contempt of private interest; neglect of personal profit.

These expressions of selfishness and disinterestedness have been used in a very loose and indeterminate manner. Brown.

To DISINVI'TE. v. a. [dis and invite.] To retract an invitation. Dict.

To DISJOI'N. v. a. [dejoindre, Fr. dis and join.] To separate; to part from each other; to disunite; to sunder.

Never shall my harp thy praise
Forget, nor from thy father's praise disjoin. Milton.

Left different degree
Disjoin us, and I then too late renounce
Deity for thee, when fate will not permit. Milton.

Happier for me, that all our hours assigned
Together we had liv'd; ev'n not in death disjoin'd. Dryden.

Never let us lay down our arms against France, till we have utterly disjoined her from the Spanish monarchy. Addison.

To DISJOI'NT. v. a. [dis and joint.]

1. To put out of joint.

Be all their liganients at once unbound,
And their disjointed bones to powder ground. Sandys.

Yet what could swords or poison, racks or flame,
But mangle and disjoint the brittle frame?
More fatal Henry's words; they murder'd Emma's fame. Prior.

2. To break at junctures; to separate at the part where there is a cement.

Mould'ring arches, and disjointed columns. Irene.

3. To break in pieces; to dilaniate.

Rotation must disperse in air
All things which on the rapid orb appear;
And if no power that motion should controul,
It must disjoint and dissipate the whole. Blackmore.

Should a barbarous Indian, who had never seen a palace or a ship, view the separate and disjointed parts, he would be able to form but a very lame and dark idea of either of those excellent and useful inventions. Watts.

4. To carve a fowl.

5. To make incoherent; to break the relation between the parts.

The constancy of your wit was not wont to bring forth such disjointed speeches. Sidney.

But now her grief has wrought her into frenzy;
The images her troubled fancy forms
Are incoherent, wild; her words disjointed. Smith.

To DISJOI'NT. v. n. To fall in pieces.

Let both worlds disjoint, and all things suffer,
Ere we will eat our meal in fear. Shak. Macbeth.

DISJOI'NT. participle. [from the verb.] Separated; divided. We now write disjointed.

Young Fortinbras,
Holding a weak supposal of our worth,
Thinks by our late dear brother's death
Our state to be disjoint and out of frame. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

DISJUDICA'TION. n. f. [dijudicatio, Lat.] Judgment; determination: perhaps only mistaken for dijudication.

The disposition of the organ is of great importance in the disjudications we make of colours. Boyle on Colours.

DISJU'NCT. adj. [disjunctus, Lat.] Disjoined; separate.

DISJU'NCTION. n. f. [from disjunctio, Lat.] Disunion; separation; parting.

You may
Enjoy your mistress now, from whom you see
There's no disjunction to be made, but by Your ruin. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

There is a great analogy between the body natural and politic, in which the ecclesiastical or spiritual part justly supplies the part of the soul; and the violent separation of this from the other, does as certainly infer death and dissolution, as the disjunction of the body and the soul in the natural. South.

DISJU'NCTIVE. adj. [disjunctivus, Lat.]

1. Incapable of union.

Such principles, whose atoms are of that disjunctive nature, as not to be united in a sufficient number to make a visible mass. Grew.

2. That which marks separation or opposition: as, I love him, or fear him.

There are such words as disjunctive conjunctions. Watts.

3. [In logick.] A disjunctive proposition is when the parts are opposed to one another by disjunctive particles: as, It is either day or night; The weather is either shiny or rainy; Quantity is either length, breadth, or depth. The truth of disjunctives depends on the necessary and immediate opposition of the parts, therefore only the last of these examples is true: but the two first are not strictly true; because twilight is a medium between day and night; and dry cloudy weather is a medium between shining and raining. Watts's Logick.

A disjunctive syllogism is when the major proposition is disjunctive: as, the earth moves in a circle, or an ellipsis; but it does not move in a circle, therefore it moves in an ellipsis. Watts's Logick.

DISJU'NCTIVELY. adv. [from disjunctive.] Distinctly; separately.

What he observes of the numbers disjunctively and apart, reason suggests to be applicable to the whole body united. Causes of the Decay of Piety.

DISK. n. f. [discus, Lat.]

1. The face of the sun, or any planet, as it appears to the eye.

The disk of Phœbus, when he climbs on high,
Appears at first but as a bloodshot eye. Dryden.

It is to be considered, that the rays, which are equally refrangible, do fall upon a circle answering to the sun's disk. Newton.

Mercury's disk
Can scarce be caught by philosophic eye,
Lost in the near effulgence. Thomson.

2. A broad piece of iron thrown in the ancient sports; a quoit.

The crystal of the eye, which in a fish is a ball, in any land animal is a disk or bowl; being hereby fitted for the clearer sight of the object. Grew.

In areas varied with mosaic art,
Some whirl the disk, and some the javelin dart. Pope.

DISKI'NDNESS. n. f. [dis and kindness.]

1. Want of kindness; want of affection; want of benevolence.

2. Ill turn; injury; act of malignity; detriment.

This discourse is so far from doing any diskindness to the cause, that it does it a real service. Woodward.

DISLI'KE. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Dislinclination; absence of affection; the contrary to fondness.

He then them took, and tempering goodly well
Their contrary dislikes with loved means,
Did place them all in order, and compel
To keep themselves within their sundry reigns,
Together link'd with adamantine chains. Spenser.

Your dislikes, to whom I would be pleasing,
Do cloud my joys with danger and with sorrow. Shakespeare.

God's grace, that principle of his new birth, gives him continual dislike to sin. Hammond's Pract. Catechism.

Our likings or dislikes are founded rather upon humour and fancy, than upon reason. L'Estrange.

Sorrow would have been as silent as thought, as severe as philosophy. It would have rested in inward senses, tacit dislikes. South.

The jealous man is not angry if you dislike another; but if you find those faults which are in his own character, you discover not only your dislike of another, but of himself. Addison.

2. Discord; dissension; disagreement. This sense is not now in use.

This said Aletes, and a murmur rose
That shew'd dislike among the christian peers. Fairfax.

To DISLI'KE. v. a. [dis and like.] To disapprove; to regard without affection; to regard with ill will or disgust.

What most he should dislike, seems pleasant to him;
What like, offensive. Shakespeare's King Lear.

Ye dislike, and so undo
The players, and disgrace the poet too. Denham.

Whosoever dislikes the digression, or grows weary of them, may throw them away. Temple.

DISLI'KEFUL. adj. [dislike and full.] Disaffected; malign: not in use.

I think it best, by an union of manners, and conformity of minds, to bring them to be one people, and to put away the dislikeful conceit of the one and the other. Spenser's Ireland.

By aught that I can ſpeak in his diſpraiſe,
She ſhall not long continue love to him. Shakeſp.

To me reproach
Rather belongs, diſtruſt, and all diſpraiſe. Milton.

Nothing is here for tears, nothing to wail
Or knock the breaſts; no weakneſs; no contempt,
Diſpraiſe, or blame. Milton's Agoniſtes.

I need not raiſe
Trophies to thee from other men's diſpraiſe. Denh.

Looks fright not men: the general has ſeen Moors
With as bad faces; no diſpraiſe to Bertran's. Dryd.

If any writer ſhall do this paper ſo much honour as to inſcribe the title of it to others, the whole praiſe or diſpraiſe of ſuch a performance will belong to ſome other author. Addiſon.

My faults will not be hid, and it is no diſpraiſe to me that they will not: the clearneſs of one's mind is never better proved than in diſcovering its own faults. Pope.

To DISPRA'ISE. v. a. [from the noun.] To blame; to cenſure; to condemn.

In praiſing Anthony, I 've diſprais'd Cæſar.
Shakeſpeare.

No abuſe, Ned, in the world; honeſt Ned, none: I diſpraiſed him before the wicked, that the wicked might not fall in love with him; in which doing, I have done the part of a careful friend.
Shakeſpeare's Henry IV.

The criticks, while they like my wares, may diſpraiſe my writing. Spectator.

DISPRA'ISER. n. ſ. [from diſpraiſe.] A cenſurer; one who blames. Dict.

Hath ta'en your part. Shakeſpeare's Othello.

To DISPRE'AD. v. a. [dis and ſpread.] To ſpread different ways. In this word, and a few others, dis has the ſame force as in Latin compoſition, and means, different ways; in different directions. This word is poetical.

As morning ſun her beams diſpreaden clear,
And in her face fair truth and mercy doth appear.
Spenſer.

Over him, art, ſtriving to compare
With nature, did an arbour green diſpread,
Framed of wanton ivy, flowing fair,
Through which the fragrant eglantine did ſpread
His pricking arms, entrail'd with roſes red. Spenſer.

Above, below, around, with art diſpread,
The ſure incloſure folds the genial bed.
Pope's Odyſſey.

Not to affect many propoſed matches
Of her own clime, complexion, and degree,
Whereto we ſee in all things nature tends:
Foh! one may ſmell, in ſuch, a will moſt rank,
Foul diſproportion, thoughts unnatural.
Shakeſpeare's Othello.

Reaſoning, I oft admire
How nature, wiſe and frugal, could commit
Such diſproportions; with ſuperfluous hand
So many nobler bodies to create,
Greater, ſo many fold, to this one uſe. Milton.

Perhaps, from greatneſs, ſtate and pride,
Thus ſurpriſed, ſhe may fall:
Sleep does diſproportion hide,
And, death reſembling, equals all. Waller.

For their ſtrength,
The diſproportion is ſo great, we cannot but Expect a fatal conſequence. Denham's Sophy.

What did the liquid to th' aſſembly call,
To give their aid to form the pond'rous ball?
Firſt tell us, why did any come? next, why
In ſuch a diſproportion to the dry?
Blackmore's Creation.

That we are deſigned for a more exalted happineſs than can be derived from the things of this life, we may infer from their vaſt diſproportion to the deſires and capacities of our ſoul. Rogers.

To DISPROPO'RTION. v. a. [from the noun.] To miſmatch; to join things unſuitable in quantity or form; to join unfitly.

There ſits deformity to mock my body,
To ſhape my legs of an unequal ſize,
To diſproportion me in every part. Shakeſpeare.

Diſtance and men's fears have ſo enlarged the truth, and ſo diſproportioned every thing, that we have made the little troop of diſcontents a gallant army, and already meaſured by the evening ſhadow. Suckling.

Muſick craveth your acquaintance: many are of ſuch diſproportioned ſpirits, that they avoid her company. Peacham.

We on earth, with undiſcording voice,
May rightly anſwer that melodious noiſe;
As once we did, till diſproportion'd ſin
Jarr'd againſt nature's chime. Milton.

DISPROPO'RTIONABLE. adj. [from diſproportion.] Unſuitable in form or quantity; not duly regulated in regard to ſomething elſe.

Doubts and fears are the ſharpeſt paſſions: through theſe falſe opticks all that you ſee is like the evening ſhadows, diſproportionable to the truth, and ſtrangely longer than the true ſubſtance. Suckling.

Had the obliquity been greater, the earth had not been able to endure the diſproportionable differences of ſeaſon. Brown.

We are apt to ſet too great a value on temporal bleſſings, and have too low and diſproportionable eſteem of ſpiritual. Smalridge.

There is no wine of ſo ſtrong a body as to bear ſuch a diſproportionable quantity of water as ſixty parts. Broome.

It is not unnecessary to digest the documents of cracking authors into several classes.

Harvey on Consumptions.

DODDER. n. s. [touteren, to shoot up, Dutch. Skinner.]

Dodder is a singular plant: when it first shoots from the seed it has little roots, which pierce the earth near the roots of other plants; but the capillaments of which it is formed soon after clinging about these plants, the roots wither away. From this time it propagates itself along the stalks of the plant, entangling itself about them. It has no leaves, but consists of capillaments or stalks, brownish with a cast of red, which run to great lengths. They have tubercles, which fix them fast down to the plant, and by means of which they absorb the juices destined for its nourishment. Hill.

DO'DDERED. adj. [from dodder.] Overgrown with dodder; covered with superfluous plants.

Near the hearth a laurel grew,
Doddered with age, whose boughs encompass round
The household gods, and shade the holy ground.
Dryden's Æneid.

The peasants were enjoin'd
Sere-wood, and firs, and dodder'd oaks to find.
Dryden's Fables.

Deſtin'd to love, as they are doom'd to reign. Granville.

DOOM. n. ſ. [bom, Saxon; doem, Latin.]

1. Judicial ſentence; judgment.

He's fled, my lord, and all his pow'rs do yield;
And humbly thus, with halters on their necks,
Expect your highneſs' doom of life or death. Shakeſpeare.

To Satan, firſt in ſin, his doom applied,
Though in myſterious terms, judg'd as then beſt. Milton.

And now, without redemption, all mankind
Muſt have been loſt, adjudg'd to death and hell
By doom ſevere. Milton.

In the great day, wherein the ſecrets of all hearts ſhall be laid open, no one ſhall be made to anſwer for what he knows nothing of; but ſhall receive his doom, his conſcience accuſing or excuſing him. Locke.

To DOT. v. n. [from the noun.] To make dots or ſpots.

DO'TAGE. n. ſ. [from dote.]
1. Loſs of underſtanding; imbecility of mind; deliriouſneſs.
The ſoul in all hath one intelligence;
Though too much moiſture in an infant's brain,
And too much drineſs in an old man's ſenſe,
Cannot the prints of outward things retain:
Then doth the ſoul want work, and idle ſit;
And this we childiſhneſs and dotage call. Davies.
I hold, that perfect joy makes all our parts
As joyful as our hearts:
Our ſenſes tell us, if we pleaſe not them,
Our love is but a dotage, or a dream. Suckling.

2. Exceſſive fondneſs.
If on your head my fury does not turn,
Thank that fond dotage which ſo much you ſcorn.
Dryden.

DO'TAL. adj. [dotalis, Latin.] Relating to the portion of a woman; conſtituting her portion; compriſed in her portion.

Time has made you dote, and vainly tell
Of arms imagin'd in your lonely cell:
Go, be the temple and the gods your care;
Permit to men the thought of peace and war.
Dryden's Æneid.
When an old woman begins to dote, and grow chargeable to a pariſh, ſhe is turned into a witch, and fills the country with extravagant fancies. Addiſon's Spectator.

2. To be in love to extremity.
He was ſtricken with great affection towards me, which ſince is grown to ſuch a doting love, that I was fain to get this place ſometimes to retire in freely. Sidney.
I have long loved her, and beſtowed much on her, followed her with a doting obſervance. Shakeſpeare.

To DOTE upon. To regard with exceſſive fondneſs; to love to exceſs.
All their prayers and love
Were ſet on Hereford, whom they doted on,
And bleſs'd, and grac'd. Shakeſp. Henry IV.
Forgive me, that I do not dream on thee,
Becauſe thou ſeeſt me dote upon my love.
Shakeſpeare.
All the beauties of the court beſides
Are mad in love, and dote upon your perſon.
Denham.
Mark thoſe who dote on arbitrary power,
And you ſhall find 'em either hot-brain'd youth,
Or needy bankrupts. Dryden.
Would you ſo dote upon your firſt deſire,
As not to entertain a nobler fire?
Dryden's Indian Emperor.
We dote upon this preſent world, and the enjoyments of it; and 'tis not without pain and fear, and reluctancy, that we are torn from them, as if our hopes lay all within the compaſs of this life. Burnet.
O death all eloquent! you only prove
What duſt we dote on, when 'tis man we love.
Prior.

2. A man fondly, weakly, and excessively in love.

If in black my lady's brow be deckt,
It mourns that painting and usurping hair
Should ravish doters with a false aspect;
And therefore is she born to make black fair.
Shakespeare.

Our doters upon red and white are incessantly perplexed by the incertainty both of the continuance of their mistress's kindness, and of the lasting of her beauty. Boyle.

DO'TINGLY. adv. [from doting.] Fondly; by excessive fondness.

That he, to wedlock dotingly betray'd,
Should hope in this lewd town to find a maid!
Dryden's Juvenal.

DO'TTARD. n. s. This word seems to signify a tree kept low by cutting.

For great trees, we see almost all overgrown trees in church-yards, or near ancient buildings, and the like, are pollards and dottards, and not trees at their full height. Bacon.

DO'TTEREL. n. s. [from dote.] The name of a bird that mimicks gestures.

We see how ready apes and monkeys are to imitate all motions of man; and in catching of dotterels, we see how the foolish bird playeth the ape in gestures. Bacon.

DOUBLE. adj. [double, French; duplex, Latin; duple, Erse.]

In any dignity. Ben Jonson's Catoline.

This sum of forty thousand pounds is almost double to what is sufficient.
Swift's Drapier's Letters.

3. Having one added to another; having more than one in the same order or parallel.

It is a curiosity also to make flowers double, which is effected by often removing them into new earth; as, on the contrary part, double flowers, by neglecting, and not removing, prove single.
Bacon's Natural History.

I met a reverend, fat, old gouty friar,
With a paunch swoln so high, his double chin
Might rest upon't. Dryden's Spanish Friar.

4. Twofold; of two kinds.

Thus cursed steel, and more accursed gold,
Gave mischief birth, and made that mischief bold,
And double death did wretched man invade,
By steel assaulted, and by gold betray'd.
Dryden's Ovid.

No star appears to lend his friendly light;
Darkness and tempest make a double night.
Dryden.

5. Two in number.

And if one power did not both see and hear,
Our sights and sounds would always double be.
Davies.

6. Having twice the effect or influence; having the power of two. Not used.

The magnifico is much belov'd,
And hath in his effect a voice potential,
As double as the duke's. Shakespeare's Othello.

7. Deceitful; acting two parts, one open, the other in secret.

1. Refuse; lees; dregs: properly something fluid.
You would think I had a hundred and fifty tatter'd prodigals lately come from swinekeeping, from eating draff and husks. Shakesp. Henry IV.
'Twere simple fury, still thyself to waste
On such as have no taste;
To offer them a surfeit of pure bread
Whose appetite is dead!
No, give them grains their fill;
Husks, draff, to drink and swill. Ben Jonson.
I call'd and I drew them thither,
My hell-hounds to lick up the draff and filth,
Which man's polluting sin with taint had shed
On what was pure. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Zelmane, to whom danger then was a cauſe of dreadleſſneſs, all the compoſition of her elements being nothing but fiery, with ſwiftneſs of deſire croſſed him. Sidney.

DREAM. n. ſ. [droom, Dutch. This word is derived by Meric Caſaubon, with more ingenuity than truth, from δρᾶμα τὸ βίου, the comedy of life; dreams being, as plays are, a repreſentation of ſomething which does not really happen. This conceit Junius has enlarged by quoting an epigram:

Σκηνὴ πᾶς ὁ βίος· ἡμῖν παίγνιον ἢ μᾶλλον παίζειν,
Τὴν σπουδὴν μεταθεὶς, ἢ φίλε τὰς ὄψεις.
Anthol.]

1. A phantaſm of ſleep; the thoughts of a ſleeping man.
We eat our meat in fear, and ſleep
In the affliction of thoſe terrible dreams
That ſhake us nightly. Shakeſpeare's Macbeth.
In dreams they fearful precipices tread;
Or, ſhipwreck'd, labour to ſome diſtant ſhore.
Dryden.
Glorious dreams ſtand ready to reſtore
The pleaſing ſhapes of all you ſaw before. Dryden.

2. An idle fancy; a wild conceit; a groundleſs ſuſpicion.
Let him keep
A hundred knights; yea, that on ev'ry dream,
Each buz, each fancy, each complaint, diſlike,
He may enguard his dotage. Shakeſp. K. Lear.

To DREAM. v. n. preter. dreamed, or dreamt, [from the noun.]

1. To have the repreſentation of ſomething in ſleep.
Dreaming is the having of ideas, whilſt the outward ſenſes are ſtopped, not ſuggeſted by any external objects, or known occaſion, nor under the rule or conduct of the underſtanding. Locke.
I dreamed that I was conveyed into a wide and boundleſs plain. Tatler.

2. It has of before the noun.
I have long dream'd of ſuch a kind of man,
But, being awake, I do deſpiſe my dream. Shak.
I have nightly ſince
Dreamt of encounters 'twixt thyſelf and me:
We have been down together in my ſleep,
Unbuckling helms, fiſting each other's throat,
And wak'd half dead with nothing. Shak. Coriol.

3. To think; to imagine.
Theſe boys know little they are ſons to th' king,
Nor Cymbeline dreams that they are alive. Shak.
He never dreamed of the deluge, nor thought that firſt orb more than a tranſient cruſt.
Burnet's Theory.
He little dream'd how nigh he was to care,
Till treach'rous fortune caught him in the ſnare.
Dryden.

4. To think idly.
Thiſe dream on in a conſtant courſe of reading, but not digeſting. Locke.
I began to dream of nothing leſs than the immortality of my work. Smith.

5. To be ſluggiſh; to idle.

And tempts not fortune for a noble day? Dryden.

To DREAM. v. a. To ſee in a dream.
The Macedon, by Jove's decree,
Was taught to dream an herb for Ptolemy. Dryd.
At length in ſleep their bodies they compoſe,
And dreamt the future fight, and early roſe. Dryd.

DRE'AMER. n. ſ. [from dream.]

1. One who has dreams; one who has fancies in his ſleep.
The viſion ſaid, and vaniſh'd from his ſight;
The dreamer wak'n'd in a mortal fright. Dryden.
If our dreamer pleaſes to try whether the glowing heat of a glaſs furnace be barely a wandering imagination in a drowſy man's fancy, by putting his head into it, he may perhaps be wakened into a certainty. Locke.

2. An idle fanciful man; a viſionary.
Sometime he angers me
With telling of the moldwarp and the ant,
Of dreamer Merlin, and his prophecies. Shakeſp.

3. A mope; a man loſt in wild imagination; a reveur.
The man of ſenſe his meat devours,
But only ſmells the peel and flow'rs;
And he muſt be an idle dreamer,
Who leaves the pie and gnaws the ſtreamer. Prior.

4. A ſluggard: an idler.

DRE'AMLESS. adj. [from dream.] Without dreams.
The ſavages of Mount Atlas, in Barbary, were reported to be both nameleſs and dreamleſs.
Camden's Remains.

DREAR. n. ſ. Dread; terrour.
The ill-fac'd owl, death's dreadful meſſenger;
The hoarſe night raven, trump of doleful drear.
Spenſer.

DREAR. adj. [δρεοπὸς, Saxon, dreary.] Mournful; diſmal; ſorrowful.
In urns and altars round,
A drear and dying ſound
Affrights the flamens at their ſervice quaint.
Milton.

DRE'ARIHEAD. n. ſ. [from dreary.] Horrour; diſmalneſs: a word now no longer in uſe.
That ſhortly from the ſhape of womanhed,
Such as ſhe was when Pallas ſhe attempted,
She grew to hideous ſhape of drearihead,
Pined with grief of folly late repented. Spenſer.

DRE'ARIMENT. n. ſ. [from dreary.]

1. Sorrow; diſmalneſs; melancholy.
I teach the woods and waters to lament
Your doleful dreariment. Spenſer's Epithalamium.

2. Horrour; dread; terrour. This word is now obſolete.
Almighty Jove, in wrathful mood,
To wreak the guilt of mortal ſins is bent;
Hurls forth his thundering dart with deadly feud,

Thy Dol, and Helen of thy noble thoughts,
Is in base durance and contagious prison!
Haul'd thither by most mechanick dirty hands. Shakespeare.

A poor, innocent, forlorn stranger, languishing in durance, upon the false accusations of a lying, insolent, whorish woman. South.

There 's neither iron bar nor gate,
Portcullis, chain, nor bolt, nor grate;
And yet men durance there abide,
In dungeons scarce three inches wide. Hudib.

Notwithstanding the warning and example before me, I commit myself to lasting durance. Congreve's Old Bachelor.

2. Endurance; continuance; duration. A doubtful word.

Sick nature it that instant tremuled round,
And mother earth figh'd as she felt the wound:
Of how short durance was this new made state;
How far more mighty than heav'n's love, hell's hate! Dryden.

DURA'TION. n. f. [duratio, Latin.]

1. A sort of distance or length, the idea whereof we get, not from the permanent parts of space, but from the fleeting and perpetually perishing parts of succession. Locke.

2. Power of continuance.

Duration is a circumstance so essential to happiness, that if we conceived it possible for the joys of heaven itself to pass from us in an instant, we should find ourselves not much concerned for the attainment of them. Rogers.

3. Length of continuance.

Aristotle, by greatness of action, does not only mean it should be great in its nature, but also in its duration; that it should have a due length in it. Addison's Spectator.

To DURE. v. n. [duro, Latin.] To last; to continue; to endure.

The delights and pleasures of the world are most pleasing while they dure. Raleigh's History.

DU'REFUL. adj. [from endure and full.] Lasting; of long continuance; durable. Not in use.

The dureful oak, whose sap is not yet dried,
Is long ere it conceive the kindling fire;
But when it once doth burn, it doth divide
Great heat, and makes his flames to heav'n aspire. Spenser.

DU'RELESS. adj. [from dure.] Without continuance; fading; transitory; short. Not in use.

Yet were that aptitude natural, more inclinable to follow and embrace the false and dureleſs pleasures of this stage-play world, than to become the shadow of God. Raleigh's History.

DURESSE. n. f. [French; hardship, severity.]

1. Imprisonment; constraint; confinement.

2. [In law.] A plea used, by way of exception, by him who, being cast into prison at a man's suit, or otherwise by threats, beating, &c. hardly used, seals any bond to him during his restraint. This the law holds as invalid, and supposes to be constrained. Cowell.

DU'RING. prep. [This word is rather a participle from dure; as, during life; durante vita, life continuing; during my pleasure, my pleasure continuing the same.] For the time of the continuance of; while any thing lasts.

If during his childhood he be constantly and rigorously kept from drinking cold liquor whilst he is hot, forbearance grows into a habit. Locke.

And the pale crescent mounts by nights their eyes. Dryden.

The surface is of a dusky yellow colour. Woodward.

By mixing such powders, we are not to expect a strong and full white; such as that of paper; but some dusky obscure one, to imitate that arising from a mixture of light and darkness, or from white and black; that is, ashy, or dun, or sullied brown. Newton's Opticks.

3. Gloomy; sad; intellectually clouded

While he continues in life, the dusky intervals of horrour, this double prospect of immortality, will frequently occur to his fancy. Rogers's Sermons.

Umbriel, a dusky, melancholy spirit,
As ever sullied the fair face of light,
Down to the central earth, his proper scene,
Repair'd to search the gloomy cave of spleen. Pope.

DUST. n. f. [bust, Saxon; duist, Dutch.]

1. Earth or other matter reduced to small particles.

The rest
Should have ascended to the roof of heaven,
Rais'd by your populous troops. Shakespeare's Antony and Cleopatra.

Dust helpeth the fruitfulness of trees, not much as they call dust upon them; their powdering, when a flower cometh, maketh a coring to the tree, being earth and water finely laid on. Bacon's Natural History.

2. The grave; the state of dissolution.

The sceptre, learning, physick, must
All follow this, and come to dust. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

Thou
Out of the ground wast taken, know thy birth;
For dust thou art, and shalt to dust return. Milt.

DU'TEOUS. adj. [from duty.]

1. Obedient, obsequious; respectful to those who have natural or legal authority.

Great Agamemnon's dire duteous ire expires,
And every pulse forgets its former fierceness.
Dryden.

A stout commander, with a manly mind;
A duteous subject, and a father kind,
In fair domestic peace, and foreign hate renown'd.
Dryden.

What mighty heats will vindicate wrongs to strive,
To bring her subject to the certain hive;
And thence the herald seeks again to pass
Duteous, and hark'ning to the sounding brass?
Prior.

2. Obsequious; obedient to good or bad purposes: with to.

I know thee well, a serviceable villain!
As duteous to the vices of thy mistress,
As badness would desire. Shakesp. King Lear.

Every beast, more duteous at her call,
Than at Circe's call the herd disguis'd. Milton.

3. Enjoined by duty; enforced by the relation of one to another. This sense is not now used.

DU'TIFULNESS. n. f. [from dutiful.]

1. Obedience; submission to just authority.

Piety, or dutifulness to parents, was a most popular virtue among the Romans. Dryden's Æn.

2. Reverence; respect.

It is a strange kind of civility, and an evil dutifulness in friends and relatives, to suffer him to perish without reproof or medicine, rather than to seem unmannerly to a great sinner.
Taylor's Rule of Living Holy.

DU'TY. n. f. [from due.]

1. That to which a man is by any natural or legal obligation bound.

When ye shall have done all those things which are commanded you, say, We are unprofitable servants: we have done that which was our duty to do. Luke, xvii. 10.

The pain children feel from any necessity of nature, it is the duty of parents to relieve. Locke.

2. Acts or forbearances required by religion or morality. In this sense it has a plural.

Good my lord,
You have begot me, bred me, lov'd me: I
Return those duties back, as are right fit;
Obey you, love you, and most honour you.
Shakspeare.

All our duty is set down in our prayers, because in all our duty we beg the Divine assistance, and remember that you are bound to do all those actions for the doing of which you have prayed for the Divine assistance. Taylor's Devotion.

3. Obedience or submission due to parents, governours, or superiours; loyalty, piety to parents.

Think'st thou that duty shall have dread to speak,
When power to flatt'ry bows? To plainness honour
Is bound, when majesty to folly falls.
Shakespeare's King Lear.

God's party will appear small, and the king's not greater; it being not probable, that those should have sense of duty to him that had none to God. Decay of Piety.

To DWARF. v. a. [from the noun.] To hinder from growing to the natural bulk; to lessen; to make little.

It is reported that a good strong canvas, spread over a tree grafted low, soon after it putteth forth, will dwarf it, and make it spread.
Bacon's Natural History.

The whole sex is in a manner dwarfed, and shrunk into a race of beauties, that seems almost another species. Addison.

DWA'RFISH. adj. [from dwarf.] Below the natural bulk; low; small; little; petty; despicable.

Then dwarfish pages were
As cherubins, all gilt. Shakspeare's Henry VIII.

And are you grown so high in his esteem,
Because I am so dwarfish and so low? Shakespeare.

This unheard sauciness, and boyish troops,
The king doth smile at; and is well prepar'd
To whip this dwarfish war, these pigmy arms,
From out the circle of his territories.
Shakespeare's King John.

A thicket close beside the grove there stood,
With briars and brambles choak'd, and dwarfish wood. Dryden.

We should have lost oaks and cedars, and the other tall and lofty sons of the forest, and have found nothing but dwarfish furze, and creeping moss, and despicable mushrooms. Bentley.

E

E, Has two ſounds; long, as ſēne, and ſhort, as men. E is the moſt frequent vowel in the Engliſh language; for it not only is uſed like the reſt in the beginning or end of words, but has the peculiar quality of lengthening the foregoing vowel, as, cĭn, cīne; mŏn, mōne; gr p, grīpe; glĭd, glide; brĕd, brēde; ch n, chine; swŏp, swōpe; thŏn, thine; nŏd, node; tŭn, tūne; plŭm, plūme. Yet it ſometimes occurs final, where yet the foregoing vowel is not lengthened; as gŏne, knowlĕdge, ĭdge, grāve. Anciently almoſt every word ended with e, as for can, canne; for year, yeare; for great, greate; for need, neede; for flock, flocke. It is probable that this e final had at firſt a ſoft ſound, like the female e of the French; and that afterwards it was in poetry either mute or vocal, as the verſe required, 'till at laſt it became univerſally ſilent.

Ea has the ſound of e long: the e is commonly lengthened rather by the immediate addition of a than by the appoſition of e to the end of the word; as men, mēan; ſel, ſeal; met, mēat; net, nēat.

EACH. pron. [elc, Saxon; elch, Dutch; ilk, Scottiſh.

1. Either of two.

Though your orbs of different greatneſs be,
Yet both are for each other's uſe diſpoſ'd;
His to incloſe, and your's to be incloſ'd. Dryden.

2. Every one of any number. This ſenſe is rare, except in poetry.

Th' invention all admir'd, and each how he
To be the inventer miſs'd. Milton.

Let each
His adamantine coat gird well, and each
Fit well his helm Milton.

By hunger, that each other creature tames,
Thou art not to be harm'd, therefore not mov'd;
Thy temperance invincible beſides.
Milton's Par. Reg.

Wiſe Plato ſaid, the world with men was ſtor'd,
That ſuccour each to other might afford. Denham.

To EACH the correſpondent word is other, whether it be uſed of two, or of a greater number.

'Tis ſaid they eat each other. Shakeſp. Macbeth.

Let each eſteem other better than themſelves.
Phil. ii. 3.

Lovelieſt of women! heaven is in thy ſoul;
Beauty and virtue ſhine for ever round thee,
Bright'ning each other! Thou art all divine.
Addiſon's Cato.

EAD. [æd. ed.] in the compound, and eadig in the ſimple names, denotes happineſs, or bleſſedneſs. Dryden.

I'll kill thee with ſuch eagerneſs of haſte,
As fiends, let looſe, would lay all nature waſte.
Dryden.

EA'GLE. n. ſ. [aigle, French; aquila, Latin; ealler, Erſe.]

1. A bird of prey, which, as it is reported, renews its age when it grows old. It is alſo ſaid not to drink at all, like other birds with ſharp claws. It is given out, that when an eagle ſees its young ſo well grown as to venture upon flying, it hovers over their neſt, and excites them to imitate it, and take their flight; and when it ſees them weary, or fearful, it takes them upon its back. Eagles are ſaid to be extremely ſharp-ſighted, and, when they take flight, ſpring perpendicularly upward, with their eyes ſteadily fixed upon the ſun. Calmet.

Draw forth the monſters of the abyſs profound,
Or fetch th' aerial eagle to the ground. Pope.

EA'GLESTONE. n. ſ. A ſtone ſaid to be found at the entrance of the holes in which the eagles make their neſts, and affirmed to have a particular virtue in defending the eagle's neſt from thunder. Calmet.

The eaglestone contains, in a cavity within it, a ſmall looſe ſtone, which rattles when it is ſhaken; and every foſſil, with a nucleus in it, has obtained the name. The analogy between a ſtone, thus containing another within it, or, as the fanciful writers expreſs it, pregnant with another, and a woman big with child, led people to imagine that it muſt have great virtues and effects in accelerating or retarding delivery; ſo that, if tied to the arm of a woman with child, it prevents abortion; and if to the leg, it promotes delivery. On ſuch idle and imaginary virtues was raiſed all the credit which this famous fotiſh poſſeſſed for ſo many ages.

Hill's Materia Medica

If you ſtop the holes of a hawk's bell it will make no ring, but a flat noiſe or rattle; and ſo doth the artificer, of eagle ſtone, which hath a little ſtone within it. Bacon

EA'GLET. n. ſ. [from eagle.] A young eagle.

2. To conſume; to corrode.

Thou beſt of gold art worſt of gold;
Others leſs fine in carrat is more precious,
Preſerving life in med'cine potable:
But thou, moſt fine, moſt honour'd, moſt renown'd,
Haſt eat thy bearer up. Shakeſp. Henry IV.

They entail a ſecret curſe upon their eſtates, which does either inſenſibly waſte and conſume it, or eat out the heart and comfort of it. Tillotſon.

Eating cares,
Lydian airs. Milton.

There ariſes a neceſſity of keeping the ſurface even, either by preſſure or eating medicines, that the eminence of the fleſh may not reſiſt the fibres of the ſkin in their tendency to cover the wound. Sharp's Surgery.

3. To ſwallow back; to retract. This is only uſed of a man's word.

They cannot hold, but burſt out thoſe words, which afterwards they are forced to eat. Hakewill on Providence.

Credit were not to be loſt
B' a brave knight errant of the poſt,
That eats, perfidiouſly, his word,
And ſwears his eats through a two inch board, Hudibras.

To EAT. v. n.

1. To go to meals; to take meals; to feed.

He did eat continually at the king's table. 2 Sam. ix. 13.

And when the ſcribes and phariſees ſaw him eat with publicans and ſinners, they ſaid unto his diſciples, How is it that he eateth with publicans and ſinners! Matt. ii. 16.

2. To take food.

He that will not eat till he has a demonſtration that it will nourith him, he that will not ſtir till he infallibly knows the buſineſs he goes about will ſucceed, will have little elſe to do but ſit ſtill and periſh Locke.

3. To be maintained in food.

The righteous eateth to the ſatisfying of his ſoul, but the belly of the wicked ſhall want. Prov. xiii. 25.

Thou art paſt the tyrant's ſtroke;
Care no more to cloath and eat. Shakeſp. Cymb.

But, thanks to my indulgent ſtars, I eat,
Since I have found the ſecret to be great. Prior.

4. To make way by corroſion.

The plague of ſin has even altered his nature, and eaten into his very eſſentials. South.

A prince's court eats too much into the income of a poor ſtate. Addiſon's Italy.

EA'TABLE. adj. [from eat.] That may be eaten.

EA'TABLE. n. ſ. Any thing that may be eaten.

If you all ſorts of perſons would engage,
Suit well your eatables to ev'ry age.
King's Art of Cookery.

EA'TER. n. ſ. [from eat.]

1. One that eats any thing.

The Caribees and the Cannibals, almoſt all, are eaters of man's fleſh. Abbot's Deſcrip of the World.

A knave, a raſcal, an eater of broken meats. Shak.

If the taſte of this fruit maketh the eaters like gods, why remaineſt thou a beaſt?
Brown's Vulgar Errours.

As if the lotus grew only here, the virtue of whole fruit is to cauſe in the eaters an oblivion of all other ſoils. Howel.

2. A corroſive.

EATH. adj. [eaꝺ, Saxon.] Eaſy; not difficult. An old word.

Where eaſe abounds, it's eath to do amiſs.
Fairy Queen.

What works not beauty, man's relenting mind
Is eath to move with plaints and ſhews of woe.
Fairfax.

The way was ſtraight and eath. Fairfax.

EATH. adv. [from the adjective.] Eaſily. An old word.

Who hath the world not try'd,
From the right way full eath may wander wide.
Hubb. Tale.

EA'TINGHOUSE. n. ſ. [eate and houſe.] A houſe house where provisions are sold ready dressed.

An hungry traveller stept into an eating house for his dinner. L'Estrange.

EAVES. n. s. [eȝeȝe, Saxon.] The edges of the roof which overhang the house.

Every night he comes
With musick of all sorts, and songs compos'd
To her unworthiness. it nothing steads us
To chide him from our eaves; for he perfists,
As if his life lay on't.
Shakesp. All's well that ends well.

His tears run down his beard, like Winter drops
From eaves of reeds. Shakesp. Tempest.

If in the beginning of Winter the drops of the eaves of houses come more slowly down than they use, it portendeth a hard and frosty Winter. Bacon

Usher'd with a shower still,
When the gust hath blown his fill,
Finding on the rustling leaves,
With minute drops from off the eaves. Milton.

The icicles hang down from the eaves of houses.
Woodward

To EA'VESDROP. v. a. [eaves and drop.] To catch what comes from the eaves; in common phrase, to listen under windows.

EA'VESDROPPER, n. s. [eaves and drop.] A listener under windows; an insidious listener.

Under our tents I'll play the eaves dropper.
To hear if any mean do shrink from me. Shakesp.

EBB, n. s. [ebba, epplob, Saxon; ebbe, Dutch.]

1. The reflux of the tide towards the sea: opposed to flow.

The clear sun on his wide watʼry glass
Gaz'd hot, and of the fresh wave largely drew,
As after thirst; which made them flowing shrink
From standing lake to tripping ebb, that stole
With soft foot tow'rds the deep. Milton.

Hither the seas at stated times resort,
And shove the loaden vessels into port;
Then with a gentle ebb retire again,
And render back their cargo to the main
Addison on Italy.

2. Decline; decay; waste.

You have finished all the war, and brought all things to that low ebb which you speak of.
Spenser on Ireland.

This tide of man's life, after it once turneth and declineth, ever runneth with a perpetual ebb and falling stream, but never floweth again.
Raleigh's History.

Thus all the treasure of our flowing years
Our ebb of life for ever takes away. Roscommon

The greatest age for poetry was that of Augustus Cæsar, yet painting was then at its lowest ebb, and perhaps sculpture was also declining. Dryden.

Near my apartment let him prisoner be,
That I his hourly ebbs of life may see. Dryd.

What is it he aspires to?
Is it not this? To shed the flow remains,
His last poor ebb of blood in your defence.
Addison's Cato.

To EBB. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To flow back towards the sea: opposed to flow.

Though my tide of blood
Hath proudly flow'd in vanity till now,
Now it doth turn and ebb back to the sea. Shakesp.

From thence the tide of fortune left their shower,
And ebb'd much faster than it flow'd before.
Dryden's Æn.

2. To decline; to decay; to waste.

Well, I am standing water:
——I'll teach you how to flow.
——Do so: to ebb
Hereditary sloth instructs me. Shakesp. Tempest.

But oh, he ebbs! the smiling waves decay!
For ever lovely stream, for ever stay! Halifax

E'BEN, E'BON, E'BONY. } n. s. [ebenus, Latin.] A hard, heavy, black, valuable wood, which admits a fine gloss.

If the wood be very hard, as ebony, or lignum vitæ, they are to turn; they use not the same tools they do for soft woods. Moxon's Mech. Exercises.

Oft by the winds extinct the signal lies,
Ere night has half roll'd round her ebon throne. Guy.

EBRI'ETY, n. s. [ebrietas, Latin.] Drunkenness; intoxication by strong liquors.

Bitter almonds, as an antidote against ebriety, hath commonly failed. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

EBRI'LLADE. n. s. [French.] A check of the bridle which a horseman gives a horse by a jerk of one rein, when he refuses to turn.

EBRIO'SITY. n. s. [ebriositas, Latin.] Habitual drunkenness.

That religion which excuseth Noah in surprisal, will neither acquit ebriosity nor ebriety in their intended perversion. Brown.

EBULLI'TION, n. s. [ebullo. Lat.]

1. The act of boiling up with heat.

2. Any intestine motion.

The dissolution of gold and silver disagree; so that in their mixture there is great ebullition, darkness, and in the end, a precipitation of a black powder.
Bacon

Iron, in aqua fortis, will fall into ebullition with noise and emication; as also a cruse and fumid exhalation, caused from the combat of the sulphur of iron with the acid and nitrous spirits of aqua fortis.
Brown's Vulgar Errours.

3. That struggling or effervescence which arises from the mingling together any alkalizate and acid liquor; any intestine violent motion of the parts of a fluid occasioned by the struggling of particles of different properties. Quincy.

When aqua fortis, or spirit of vitriol, poured upon filings of iron, dissolves the filings with a great heat and ebullition, is not the heat and ebullition effected by a violent motion of the parts; and does not their motion argue, that the acid parts of the liquor rush towards the parts of the metal with violence, and run forcibly into its pores, 'till they get between its outmost particles and the main mass of the metal? Newton.

A violent cold, as well as heat, may be produced by this ebullition, for if sal ammoniack, or any pure volatile alkali, dissolved in water, be mixed with an acid, an ebullition, with a greater degree of cold, will ensue. Arbuth. not on Aliments.

ECCE'NTRICAL. } adj. [eccentricus, Lat.]
ECCE'NTRICK. }

1. Deviating from the centre.

2. Not having the same centre with another circle: such circles were supposed by the Ptolemaick philosophy.

Astronomers, to solve the phænomena, framed to their concent eccentricks and epicycles, and a wonderful engine of orbs. Bacon

Thither his course he bends
Through the calm firmament; but up or down,
By centrick or eccentrick, hard to tell. Milton.

They build, unbuild, contrive,
To save appearances: they gird the sphere
With centrick, and eccentrick, scribbl'd o'er,
Cycle, and epicycle, orb in orb. Milton

Whence is it that planets move all one and the same way in orbs concentrick, while comets move all manner of ways in orbs very eccentrick?
Newton's Opticks.

3. Not terminating in the same point; not directed by the same principle.

Whatsoever affairs pass such a man's hands, he crooketh them to his own ends; which must needs be often eccentrick to the ends of his master.
Bacon's Essays.

Irregular; anomalous; deviating from stated and constant methods.

This motion, like others of the times, seem eccentrick and irregular. King Charles

A character of an eccentrick virtue, is the more exact image of human life, because it is not wholly exempted from its frailties. Dryden.

Then from whate'er we can to sense produce,
Common and plain, or wond'rous and abstruse,
From nature's constant or eccentrick laws,
The thoughtful soul this gen'ral inference draws.
That an effect must presuppose a cause. Prior.

ECCENTRI'CITY. n. s. [from eccentrick.]

1. Deviation from a centre.

2. The state of having a different centre from another circle.

In regard of eccentricity, and the epicycle wherein it moveth, the motion of the moon is unequal
Brown.

By reason of the sun's eccentricity to the earth, and obliquity to the equator, he appears to move unequally Hooker.

3. Excursion from the proper orb.

The duke at his return from his eccentricity, for so I account favourites abroad, met no good news.
Wotton.

4. Eccentricity of the earth is the distance between the focus and the centre of the earth's elliptick orbit. Harris.

ECCHY'MOSIS. n. s. [ἐκχυμωσις.] Livid spots or blotches in the skin, made by extravasated blood. Quincy.

Ecchymosis may be defined an extravasation of the blood in order the skin, the skin remaining whole. Wiseman.

Laxations are accompanied with tumour and ecchymosis. Wiseman.

ECCLESIA'STICAL. } adj. [ecclesiasticus,
ECCLESIA'STICK. } Lat.] Relating to the church; not civil.

Is discipline an ecclesiastical matter or civil? If an ecclesiastical, it must belong to the duty of the minister. Hooker.

Clergymen, otherwise little fond of obscure terms, yet in their sermons are liberal of those which they find in ecclesiastical writers. Swift.

A church of England man has a true veneration for the scheme established among us of ecclesiastick government. Swift.

ECCLESIA'STICK n. s. [from the adjective.] A person dedicated to the ministries of religion.

The ambition of the ecclesiasticks destroyed the purity of the church. Prior's Hist.

ECCOPRO'TICKS. n. s. [ἐκ and κόπρος.] Such medicines as gently purge the belly, so as to bring away no more than the natural excrements lodged in the intestines.

The body ought to be maintained in its daily excretions by such means as are ecoprotick.
Harvey on the Plague.

ECHINA'TE. } adj. [from echinus, Latin.]
ECHINA'TED. } Bristled like an hedgehog; set with prickles.

An echinated pyrites in shape approaches the echinated crystalline balls. Woodward on Fossils.

E'CHINUS. n. s. [Latin.]

1. A hedgehog.

2. A shell fish set with prickles.

3. [With botanists.] The prickly head, cover of the seed, or top of any plant.

4. [In architecture.] A member or ornament, taking its name from the roughness of the carving, resembling the prickly rind of a chesnut, and not unlike the thorny coat of a hedge-hog.

This ornament is used by modern architects in cornishes of the Ionick, Corinthian, and Composite orders; and generally set next to the abacus, being carved with anchors, darts, and ovals or eggs.
Harris.

ECHO. n. s. [ἠχω; Lat.]

1. Echo was supposed to have been once a nymph, nymph, who pined into a ſound for love of Narciſſus,

The pleaſant myrtle may teach th' unfortunate Echo
In theſe woods to reſound the renowned name of a goddeſs. Sidney.

2. The return or repercuſſion of any ſound.

The ſound, filling great ſpaces in arched lines, cannot be guided; therefore there hath not been any means to make artificial echoes. Bacon's Nat. Hiſt

3. The ſound returned.

Babbling echo mocks the hounds,
Replying ſhrilly to the well-tun'd horns,
As if a double huntſman were heard at once. Shakeſp.
Wilt thou hunt?
Thy hounds ſhall make the welkin anſwer them,
And fetch ſhrill echoes from their hollow earth. Shakeſpeare.

O woods, O fountains, hillocks, dales and bow'rs!
With other echo late I taught your ſhades
To anſwer, and reſound far other ſong! Milton
To you I mourn, nor to the deaf I ſing;
The woods ſhall anſwer, and the echo ring. Pope
'Tis not enough no harſhneſs gives offence;
The ſound muſt ſeem an echo to the ſenſe. Pope

To ECHO. v. n.

1. To reſound; to give the repercuſſion of a voice.

At the parting
All the church echo'd. Shakeſ. Taming of the Shrew.
Through rocks and caves the name of Delia beats,
Delia each cave and echoing rock rebounds. Pope

2. To be ſounded back.

Hark, how the ſtund diſturbs imperious Rome!
Shrinks her proud baſe, and trembling from dome to dome!
Her tyrant princes hear the echoing noiſe,
And, A Brun, dread thy wrath and awful voice. Ben Jonſon.

To ECHO. v. a. To ſend back a voice, to return what has been uttered.

Our ſcparates do but echo the ſame note. Decay of Piety
With peals of ſhouts the Tyrians fill the ſong,
Theſe peals are echo'd by the Trojan throng. Dryden's Æn.
One great death deforms the dreary ground,
The echo'd woes from diſtant rocks rebound. Prior.

ECLAIRCISSEMENT. n. ſ. [French.] Explanation; the act of clearing up an affair by verbal expoſtulation.

The eclairciſſement ended in the diſcovery of the informer. Clarendon

ECLAT. n. ſ. [French.] Splendour; ſhow. Luſtre. Not Engliſh.

Nothing more contributes to the variety, ſurpriſe, and eclat of Homer's battles, than that artificial manner of gaging his heroes by each other. Pope's Eſſay on Homer.

ECLE'CTICK. adj. [ἐκλεκτικὸς] Selecting, chuſing at will.

Cicero was of the eclectick ſect, and choſe out of each ſuch portions as came neareſt truth. Watts on the Mind

ECLE'GMA. n. ſ. [ἔκ and λείχω.] A form of medicine made by the incorporation of oils with ſyrups, and which is to be taken upon a liquorice ſtick. Quincy.

ECLIPSE. n. ſ. [ἔκλειψις.]

1. An obſcuration of the luminaries of heaven; the ſun is eclipſed by the intervention of the moon; the moon by the interpoſition of the earth. The word originally ſignifies departure from the place, to which Milton alludes,

Sips of yew,
Silver'd in the moon's eclipſe. Shakeſp. Macbeth
Planets, planet-ſtruck, real eclipſe
Then ſuffer'd. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt
So though the ſun victorious be,
And from a dark eclipſe ſet free,
The influence, which we fondly fear,
Afflicts our thoughts the following year. Waller.

An eclipſe of the moon is when the atmoſphere of the earth, between the ſun and the moon, hinders the light of the ſun from falling upon and being reflected by the moon: if the light of the ſun is kept off from the whole body of the moon, it is a total eclipſe; if from a part only, it is a partial one Locke.

2. Darkneſs; obſcuration.

All the poſterity of our firſt parents ſuffered a perpetual eclipſe of ſpiritual life. Raleigh's Hiſt

Experience we have of the vanity of human glory, in our ſcatterings and eclipſes. King Charles.

To ECLIPSE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To darken a luminary.

Let the eclipſed moon her throne reſign. Sandys.
Now if the earth were ſhut the darken'd moon
Would ſeem to all eclipſ'd as well as one. Creech.

2. To extinguiſh; to put out.

Then here I take my leave of thee, fair ſon,
Born to eclipſe thy life this afternoon.
Shakſp. Henry VI.

3. To cloud; to obſcure.

They had ſeen tokens of more than common greatneſs, howſoever now eclipſed with fortune. Sidney

Praiſe him to his father:
—Let the prince's ſtory.
Seem to eclipſe, and caſt a cloud on his. Denham's Sophy

Let other muſes write his proſp'rous fate,
Of conquer'd nations tell, and kings reſtor'd;
But mine ſhall ſing of his eclipſ'd eſtate,
Which, like the ſun's more wonders does afford. Dryden.

He deſcended from his Father, and eclipſed the glory of his divine Majeſty with a veil of fleſh. Calamy's Sermons

4. To diſgrace.

She told the king, that her huſband was eclipſed in Ireland by the no-countenance his majeſty had ſhewed towards him. Clarendon

Another now hath to himſelf engroſs'd
All pow'r, and us eclipſ'd. Milton's Par. Loſt

ECLI'PTICK. n. ſ. [ἐκλειπτικὸς.] A great circle of the ſphere, ſuppoſed to be drawn through the middle of the Zodiack, and making an angle with the Equinoctial, in the points of Aries and Libra, of 23°. 30′. which is the ſun's greateſt declination. This is by ſome called via ſolis, or the way of the ſun, becauſe the ſun, in his annual motion, never deviates from this line. This line is drawn on the globe: but in the new aſtronomy the Ecliptick is that path among the fixed ſtars, which the earth appears to deſcribe to an eye placed in the ſun, as in its annual motion it runs round the ſun from Weſt to Eaſt. If you ſuppoſe this circle to be divided into twelve equal parts, they will be the twelve ſigns. Harris.

All ſtars that have their diſtance from the Ecliptick northwards not more than twenty-three degrees and a half, may, in progreſſion of time, have declination ſouthward, and move beyond the equinoctial. Brown's Vulgar Errours

The terraqueous globe had the ſame ſite and poſition, in reſpect of the ſun, that it now hath: its axis was not parallel to that of the Ecliptick, but inclined in like manner as it is at preſent. Woodward's Natural Hiſtory

You muſt conceive an imaginary plane, which paſſing through the centre of the ſun and the earth, extends itſelf on all ſides as far as the firmament: this plane is called the Ecliptick, and in this the centre of the earth is perpetually carried, without any deviation. Bentley.

ECLI'PTICK. adj. Deſcribed by the ecliptick line.

The earth's rotation makes the night and day;
The ſun revolving through th' Ecliptick way,
Erects the various ſeaſons of the year. Blackmore.

E'CLOGUE. n. ſ. [ἐκλογὴ.] A paſtoral poem, ſo called becauſe Virgil called his paſtorals eclogues.

What exclaiming praiſes Baſilius gave this eclogue any man may gueſs, that knows love is better than ſpectacles to make every thing ſeem great. Sidney.

It is not ſufficient that the ſentences be bitter, the whole eclogue ſhould be ſo too. Pope.

ECO'NOMY n. ſ. [οἰκονομία.] This word is often written, from its derivation, œconomy; but œ being no diphthong in Engliſh, it is placed here with the authorities for different orthography.]

1. The management of a family; the government of a houſehold.

By St. Paul's economy the heir differs nothing from a ſervant, while he is in his minority; ſo a ſervant ſhould differ nothing from a child in the ſubſtantial part. Taylor.

2. Diſtribution of expence.

Particular ſums are not laid out to the greateſt advantage in his economy; but are ſometimes ſuffered to run waſte, while he is only careful of the main. Dryden.

3. Frugality; diſcretion of expence; laudable parſimony.

I have no other notion of economy, than that it is the parent of liberty and eaſe. Swift to Bolingb.

4. Diſpoſition of things; regulation.

All the divine and infinitely wiſe ways of economy that God could uſe to unite a rational creature, oblige mankind to that courſe of living which is moſt agreeable to our nature. Hamm.

5. The diſpoſition or arrangement of any work.

In the Greek poets, as in Plautus, we ſee the œconomy and diſpoſition of poems better obſerved than in Terence. Ben Jonſon.

If this economy muſt be obſerved in the minuteſt parts of an epick poem, what ſoul, though ſent into the world with great advantages of nature, cultivated with the liberal arts and ſciences, can be ſufficient to inform the body of ſo great a work? Dryden's Dedication to the Æneid.

6. Syſtem of matter; diſtribution of every thing active or paſſive to its proper place.

Theſe the ſtreamers aid,
That by a conſtant ſeparation made,
They may a due economy maintain;
Exclude the noxious parts, the good retain. Blackmore.

ECONO'MICK.
ECONO'MICAL. } adj. [from economy.]

1. Pertaining to the regulation of an houſehold.

How quick'ning power in every living part,
Doth as a nurſe, or as a mother ſerve;
And doth employ her economick art,
And buſy care, her houſhold to preſerve. Davies.

In economical affairs, having propoſed the government of a family, we conſider the proper means to effect it. Watts.

2. Frugal.

Some are ſo plainly economical, as even to deſire that the ſeat be well watered, and well ſwelled. Wotton's Architect.

ECPHRA'CTICKS. n. ſ. [ἔκ and φράσσω.] Such medicines as render tough humours more thin, ſo as to promote their diſcharge. Quincy.

Procure the blood a free courſe, ventilation, and tranſpiration, by ſuitable purges and ecphracticks medicines. Harvey.

ECSTASY. n. ſ. [ἔκστασις.]

1. Any paſſion by which the thoughts are abſorbed, and in which the mind is for a time loſt.

Follow them ſwiftly,

And

And hinder them from what this ecſtaſy
May now provoke them to. Shakeſp. Tempeſt.

'T may be
No longer joy there, but an ecſtaſy. Suckling.

Whether what we call ecſtaſy be not dreaming with our eyes open, I leave to be examined, Locke.

2. Exceſſive joy; rapture.

O love, be moderate! allay thy ecſtaſy! Shakeſp.

The religious pleaſure of a well-diſpoſed mind moves gently, and therefore conſtantly: it does not affect by rapture and ecſtaſy; but is like the pleaſure of health, ſtill and ſober. South.

Each delighted, and delighting, gives
The pleaſing ecſtaſy which each receives. Prior.

A pleaſure, which no language can expreſs;
An ecſtaſy, that mothers only feel,
Plays round my heart. Philips's Diſtreſt Mother.

3. Enthuſiaſm; exceſſive elevation and abſorption of the mind.

He lov'd me well, and oft would beg me ſing;
Which when I did, he on the tender graſs
Would ſit, and harken even to ecſtaſy. Milton.

4. Exceſſive grief or anxiety. This is not now uſed.

Sighs and groans, and ſhrieks that rend the air,
Are made, not mark'd; where violent ſorrow ſeems
A modern ecſtaſy. Shakeſp. Macbeth.

Better be with the dead,
Than on the torture of the mind to lie
In reſtleſs ecſtaſy. Shakeſp. Macbeth.

5. Madneſs; diſtraction. This ſenſe is not now in uſe.

Now ſee that noble and moſt ſovereign reaſon,
Like ſweet bells jangled out of tune, and harſh,
That unmatch'd form, and feature of blown youth,
Blaſted with ecſtaſy. Shakeſp. Hamlet.

E'CSTASIED. adj. [from ecſtaſy.] Raviſhed; filled with enthuſiaſm.

Theſe are as common to the inanimate things as to the moſt ecſtaſied ſoul upon earth. Norris.

ECSTA'TICAL. } adj. [ἐκστατικὸς.]
ECSTA'TICK. }

1. Raviſhed; rapturous; elevated beyond the uſual bounds of nature.

There doth my ſoul in holy viſion ſit,
In penſive trance, and anguiſh, and ecſtatick fit. Milton.

When one of them, after an ecſtatical manner, fell down before an angel, he was ſeverely rebuked, and bidden to worſhip God. Stillingfleet.

In trance ecſtatick may thy pangs be drown'd;
Bright clouds deſcend, and angels watch thee round. Pope.

2. Raiſed to the higheſt degree of joy.

To gain Peſcennius one employs his ſchemes;
One graſps a Cecrops in ecſtatick dreams. Pope.

3. Tending to external objects. This ſenſe is, I think, only to be found once, though agreeable enough to the derivation.

I find in me a great deal of ecſtatical love, which continually carries me out to good without myſelf. Norris.

E'CTYPE. n. ſ. [ἔκτυπος.] A copy.

The complex ideas of ſubſtances are ectypes, copies, but not perfect ones; not adequate. Locke.

E'CURIE. n. ſ. [French; equus, Lat.] A place covered for the lodging or houſing of horſes.

EDA'CIOUS. adj. [edax, Lat.] Eating; voracious; devouring; predatory; ravenous; rapacious; greedy.

EDA'CITY. n. ſ. [edacitas, Lat.] Voracity; ravenouſneſs; greedineſs; rapacity.

The wolf is a beaſt of great edacity and digeſtion; it may be the parts of him comfort the bowels. Bacon.

To E'DDER. v. a. [probably from edge.] To bind or interweave a fence. Not in uſe.

To add ſtrength to the hedge, edder it; which is, bind the top of the ſtakes with ſome ſmall long poles on each ſide. Mortimer's Huſbandry.

E'DDER. n. ſ. [from the verb.] Such fence-wood as is commonly put upon the top of fences. Not in uſe.

In lopping and felling, ſave edder and ſtake,
Thine hedges, as needeth, to mend or to make. Tuſſer.

E'DDY. n. ſ. [eb, backward, again, and ea, water, Saxon.]

1. The water that by ſome reperculſion, or oppoſite wind, runs contrary to the main ſtream.

My praiſes are as a bulruſh upon a ſtream; if they ſink not, 'tis becauſe they are borne up by the ſtrength of the current, which ſupports their lightneſs; but they are carried round again, and return on the eddy where they firſt began. Dryden.

The moſt common diverſities of human conſtitutions, ariſe from the ſolids, as to their different degrees of ſtrength and tenſion; in ſome being too lax and weak, in others too elaſtick and ſtrong.
Arbuthnot on Aliments.

A fermentation muſt be carried in ſome aſſignable place, which may expend itſelf by its elaſtical power, and break through, where it meets with the weakeſt reſiſtance. Bentley.

ELASTI'CITY. n. ſ. [from elaſtick.] Force in bodies, by which they endeavour to reſtore themſelves to the poſture from whence they were diſplaced by any external force. Quincy.

A lute-ſtring will bear an hundred weight without rupture; but at the ſame time cannot exerts its elaſticity take away laſty, and immediately it raiſeth the weight. Arbuthnot.

Me emptineſs and dulneſs could inſpire,
And were my elaſticity and fire. Pope.

ELA'TE. adj. [elatus, Lat.] Fluſhed with ſucceſs; elevated with proſperity; lofty; haughty.

Oh, thoughtleſs mortals! ever blind to fate!
Too ſoon dejected, and too ſoon elate!
I, of mind elate, and ſcorning fear,
Thus with new taunts inſult the monſter's ear.
Pope's Odyſſey.

To ELATE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To elevate with ſucceſs; to puff up with proſperity.

2. To exult; to heighten. An unuſual ſenſe.

On truth, divinely breaking on his mind,
Elates his being, and unfolds his power. Thomſon.

ELATERIUM. n. ſ. [Latin.] An inſpiſſated juice, light, of a friable texture and an acid and pungent taſte. It is procured from the fruit of a wild cucumber. It is a very violent and rough purge. Hill.

ELA'TION. n. ſ. [from elate.] Haughtineſs proceeding from ſucceſs; pride of proſperity.

God began to puniſh this vain elation of mind, by withdrawing his favours. Atterbury.

EL'BOW. n. ſ. [elboga, Saxon.]

1. The

1. The next joint or curvature of the arm below the ſhoulder.

In ſome fair evening, on your elbow laid,
You dream of triumphs in the rural ſhade. Pope.

2. Any flexure or angle.

Fruit trees, or vines, ſet upon a wall between elbows or buttreſſes of ſtone, riſen more than upon a plain wall. Bacon.

3. To be at the ELBOW. To be near; to be at hand.

Strait will he come;
Wear thy good rapier bare, and put it home;
Quick, quick; fear nothing, I'll be at thy elbow.
Shakeſpeare's Othello.

ELBOW-CHAIR. n. ſ. [elbow and chair.] A chair with arms to ſupport the elbows.

Swans and elbow-chairs, in the opera of Dioclefian, have danced upon the Engliſh ſtage with good ſucceſs. Gay.

E'LBOW-ROOM. n. ſ. [elbow and room.] Room to ſtretch out the elbows on each ſide; perfect freedom from confinement.

Now my ſoul hath elbow-room;
It would not out at windows nor at doors. Shakeſp.

The natives are not ſo many, but that there may be elbow-room enough for them, and for the adventives alſo. Bacon.

A politician muſt put himſelf into a ſtate of liberty to provide elbow-room for conſcience to have its full play in. South.

To EL'BOW. v. a. [from the noun.]

One elbows hims one joſtles in the ſhole.
Dryden's Juvenal.

2. To puſh; to drive to a diſtance; to encroach upon.

It thruſts and ſtretches out.
And elbows all the kingdoms round about. Dryden.

If fortune takes not off this boy betimes,
He'll make mad work and elbow out his neighbours.
Dryden.

To E'LBOW. v. n. To jut out in angles.

ELD. n. ſ. [ealb, Saxon; eld, Scottiſh.]

1. Old age; decrepitude.

Her heart with joy unwonted inly ſwell'd,
As feeling wond'rous comfort in her weaker eld.
Spenſer.

Thy blazed youth
Becomes aſſuaged, and doth beg the alms
Of palſied eld. Shakeſpeare's Meaſure for Meaſure.

He thought it touch'd his deity full near,
If likewiſe he ſome fair one wedded not,
Thereby to wipe away th' infamous blot
Of long uncoupled bed, and childleſs eld. Milton.

2. Old people; perſons worn out with years.

They count him of the green-hair'd eld. Chapman.

E'LDER. adj. The comparative of eld, now corrupted to old. [ealb, ealbop, Saxon.] Surpaſſing another in years; ſurvivor; having the privileges of primogeniture: oppoſed to younger.

They bring the compariſon of younger daughters conforming themſelves in attire to their elder ſiſters. Hooker.

Let ſtill the woman take
An elder than herſelf: ſo wears ſhe to him,
So ſways ſhe level in her huſband's heart. Shakeſp.

How I firmly am reſolv'd, you know;
That is, not to beſtow my youngeſt daughter,
Before I have a huſband for the elder. Shakeſpeare.

Among the Lacedemonians, the chief magiſtrates, as they were, ſo were they called, elder men.
Raleigh's Hiſtory.

The elder of his children comes to acquire a degree of authority among the younger, by the ſame means the father did among them.

Fame's high temple ſtands;
Stupendous pile; not rear'd by mortal hands!
Whate'er proud Rome, or artful Greece beheld,
Or elder Babylon, its name excell'd. Pope.

E'LDERS. n. ſ. [from elder.]

1. Perſons whoſe age gives them a claim to credit and reverence.

Rebuke not an elder, but intreat him as a father, and the younger men as brethren. 1 Tim. v. 1.

Our elders ſay,
The barren, touched in this holy chaſe,
Shake off their ſteril curſe. Shakeſp. Julius Cæſar.

The bluſhing youth thrit virtuous awe diſcloſe,
And from their ſeats the reverend elders roſe. Sandys.

2. Anceſtors.

Says the gooſe, If it will be no better, e'en carry your head as your elders have done before you.
L'Eſtrange.

I loſe my patience, and I own it too,
Where works are cenſur'd, not as bad, but new;
While, if our elders break all reaſon's laws,
Thoſe fools demand not pardon, but applauſe. Pope.

3. Thoſe who are older than others.

Many nations are very ſuperſtitious and diligent obſervers of old cuſtoms, which they received by continual tradition from their parents, by recording of their bards and chronicles, in their ſongs, and by daily uſe and enſample of their elders. Spenſer's Ireland.

At the board, and in private, it very well becometh children's innocency to pray, and their elders to ſay Amen. Hooker.

4. [Among the Jews.] Rulers of the people.

5. [In the New Teſtament.] Eccleſiaſticks.

6. [Among preſbyterians.] Laymen introduced into the kirk-polity in ſeſſions, preſbyteries, synods, and aſſemblies.

Flea bitten ſynod, an aſſembly brew'd
Of clerks and elders ana; like the rude
Chaos of preſbytry, where laymen ride
With the tame woolpack clergy by their ſide.
Cleaveland.

E'LDER. n. ſ. [ellaꝛa, Saxon; ſambucus.] The name of a tree.

The branches are full of pith, having but little wood: the flowers are monopetalous, divided into ſeveral ſegments, and expand in form of a roſe: there are, for the moſt part, collected into an umbel, and are ſucceeded by ſoft ſucculent berries, having three ſeeds in each. Miller.

Look for thy reward
Amongſt the nettles at the elder tree,
Which overſhades the mouth of that ſame pit.
Shakeſp.

E'LDERLY. adj. [from elder.]

1. Seniority; primogeniture.

The world, while it had ſcarcity of people, underwent no other dominion than paternity and elderſhip. Raleigh.

That all ſhould Alibech adore, 'tis true;
But ſome reſpect is to my birthright due:
My claim to her by elderſhip I prove.
Dryden's Ind. Emp.

Nor were the elderſhip
Of Artaxerxes worth our leaſt of fears,
If Memnon's intereſt did not prop his cauſe. Rowe.

2. Preſbytery; eccleſiaſtical ſenate; kirk-ſeſſion.

That controverſy ſprang up between Beza and Eraſtus, about the matter of excommunications; whether there ought to be in all churches an elderſhip, having power to excommunicate, and a part of that elderſhip to be of neceſſity certain choſen out from amongſt the laity. Hooker, Preface.

E'LDEST. adj. The ſuperlative of eld, now changed to old. [ealb, ealbop, ealoꝛte, Saxon.]

1. The oldeſt; that has the right of primogeniture.

We will eſtabliſh our eſtate upon
Our eldeſt Malcolm, whom we name hereafter
The prince of Cumberland. Shakeſp. Macbeth.

The mother's and her eldeſt daughter's grace,
It ſeems had brib'd him to prolong their ſpace.
Dryden.

2. The perſon that has lived moſt years.

Eldeſt parents ſignifies either the oldeſt men and women that have had children, or thoſe who have longeſt had iſſue. Locke.

ELECAMPA'NE. n. ſ. [helenium, Lat.] A plant, named alſo ſtarwort. Botaniſts enumerate thirty ſpecies of this plant. Miller.

The Germans have a method of candying elecampane root like ginger, to which they prefer it, and call it German ſpice. Hill's Materia Medica.

To ELE'CT. v. a. [electus, Lat.]

1. To chooſe for any office or uſe; to take in preference to others.

Henry his ſon is choſen king; though young;
And Lewis of France, elected firſt, beguil'd. Daniel.

This prince, in gratitude to the people, by whoſe conſent he was choſen, elected a hundred ſenators out of the commoners. Swift.

2. [In theology.] To ſelect as an object of eternal mercy.

ELE'CT. adj. [from the verb.]

1. Choſen; taken by preference from among others.

You have here, lady,
And of your choice, theſe reverend fathers,
Yea, the elect of the land, who are aſſembl'd
To plead your cauſe. Shakeſp. Henry VIII.

2. Choſen to an office, not yet in poſſeſſion.

The biſhop elect takes the oaths of ſupremacy, canonical obedience, and againſt ſimony; and then the dean of the arches reads and ſubſcribes the ſentences. Ayliffe's Parergon.

3. [In theology.] Choſen as an object of eternal mercy.

A vicious liver, believing that Chriſt died for none but the elect, ſhall have attempts made upon him to reform and amend his life. Hammond.

Some I have choſen of peculiar grace,
Elect above the reſt: ſo is my will. Milton.

ELE'CTION. n. ſ. [electio, Lat.]

1. The act of chuſing; the act of ſelecting one or more from a greater number for any uſe or office; choice.

If the election of the miniſter ſhould be committed to every ſeveral pariſh, do you think that they would chuſe the meeteſt? Whitgift.

Him, not my election,
But natural neceſſity, begot. Milton.

As charity is, nothing can more increaſe the luſtre and beauty than a prudent election of objects, and a fit application of it to them. Spratt.

2. The power of choice.

For what is man without a moving mind,
Which hath a judging wit, and chuſing will?
Now if God's pow'r ſhould her election bind,
Her motions then would ceaſe, and ſtand all ſtill.
Davies.

3. Voluntary preference.

He calls upon the ſinners to turn themſelves and live; he tells us, that he has ſet before us life and death, and referred it to our own election which we will chuſe. Rogers.

4. Diſcernment; diſtinction; diſcrimination.

The diſcovering of theſe colours cannot be done but out of a very univerſal knowledge of things; which ſo clearеth men's judgment and election, as it is the leſs apt to ſlide into error. Bacon.

In favour, to uſe men with much difference and election is good: for it maketh thoſe preferred more thankful, and the reſt more officious. Bacon.

5. [In theology.] The predetermination of God by which any were ſelected for eternal life.

The conceit about abſolute election to eternal life, ſome enthuſiaſts entertaining, have been made remiſs in the practice of virtue. Atterbury.

6. The ceremony of a publick choice.

I was ſorry to hear with what partiality, and popular heat, elections were carried in many places.
King Charles.

Since the late diſſolution of the club, many perſons put up for the next election. Addiſ. Spect.

ELE'CTIVE, adj. [from elect.]

1. Regulated

1. Regulated or beſtowed by election or choice.

I will ſay poſitively and reſolutely, that it is impoſſible an elective monarchy ſhould be ſo free and abſolute as an hereditary. Bacon

The laſt change of their government, from elective to hereditary, has made it ſeem hitherto of leſs force, and unfitter for action abroad. Temple.

2. Exerting the power of choice.

To talk of compelling a man to be good, is a contradiction; for where there is force, there can be no choice: whereas all moral goodneſs conſiſteth in the elective act of the underſtanding will Grew's Coſmologia Sacra.

ELE'CTIVELY. adv. [from elect.] by choice; with preference of one to another.

How or why that ſhould have ſuch an influence upon the ſpirits, as to drive them into thoſe muſcles electively, I am not ſubtle enough to diſcern. Ray on the Creation.

They work not *elective*ly, or upon propoſing to themſelves an end of their operations. Grew

ELE'CTOR. n. ſ. [from elect.]

1. He that has a vote in the choice of any officer.

From the new world her ſilver and her gold
Came, like a tempeſt, to confound the old,
Feeding with theſe the brib'd electors' hopes,
Alone ſhe gave us emperors and popes Waller.

2. A prince who has a voice in the choice of the German emperour.

ELE'CTORAL. adj. [from elector.] Having the dignity of an elector.

ELE'CTORATE. n. ſ. [from elector.] The territory of an elector.

He has a great and powerful king for his ſon-in-law, and can himſelf command, when he pleaſes, the whole ſtrength of an electorate in the empire. Addiſon's Freeholder.

ELE'CTRE. n. ſ. [electrum, Lat.]

1. Amber; which, having the quality when warmed by friction of attracting bodies, gave to one ſpecies of attraction the name of electricity, and to the bodies that ſo attract the epithet electrick.

2. A mixed metal.

Change ſilver plate or veſſel into the compound ſtuff, being a kind of ſilver electre, and turn the reſt into coin. Bacon.

ELE'CTRICAL. } adj. [from electrum
ELE'CTRICK }

See ELECTRE.

1. Attractive without magnetiſm; attractive by a peculiar property, ſuppoſed once to belong chiefly to amber.

By electrick bodies do I conceive not only ſuch as take up light bodies, in which number the antients only placed jet and amber; but ſuch as, conveniently placed, attract all bodies palpable Brown's Vulgar Errours.

An electrick body can by friction emit an exhalation ſo ſubtile, and yet ſo potent, as by its emiſſion to cauſe no ſenſible diminution of the weight of the electrick body, and to be expanded through a ſphere, whoſe diameter is above two feet, and yet to be able to carry up lead, copper, or leaf-gold at the diſtance of above a foot from the electrick body. Newton.

2. Produced by an electrick body.

If that attraction were not rather electrical than magnetical, it was wonderous what Helmont delivereth concerning a glaſs, wherein the magiſtery of loadſtone was prepared, which retained an attractive quality. Brown.

If a piece of white paper, or a white cloth, or the end of one's finger, be held at about a quarter of an inch from the glaſs, the electrick vapour, excited by friction, will, by daſhing againſt the white paper, cloth, or finger, be put into ſuch an agitation as to emit light. Newton's Opticks.

ELECTRI'CITY. n ſ. [from electrick. See ELECTRE.] A property in ſome bodies, whereby, when rubbed ſo as to grow warm, they draw little bits of paper, or ſuch like ſubſtances to them. Quincy.

Such was the account given a few years ago of electricity; but the induſtry of the preſent age, firſt excited by the experiments of Gray, has diſcovered in electricity a multitude of philoſophical wonders. Bodies electrified by a ſphere of glaſs, turned nimbly round, not only emit flame, but may be fitted with ſuch a quantity of the electrical vapour, as, if diſcharged at once upon a human body, would endanger life. The force of this vapour has hitherto appeared inſtantaneous, perſons at both ends of a long cham ſeeming to be ſtruck at once. The philoſophers are now endeavouring to intercept the ſtrokes of lightning.

ELE'CTUARY. n. ſ. [electarium, Cœlius Aurel, which is now written electuary.] A form of medicine made of conſerves and powders, in the conſiſtence of honey Electuaries made up with honey or ſyrup, when the conſiſtence is too thin, ferment; and when too thick, candy. By both which the ingredients will be altered or impaired. Quincy

We meet with divers electuaries, which have no ingredient, except ſugar, common to any two of them. Boyle.

ELEEMO'SYNARY. adj. [ἐλεημοσύνη.]

1. Living upon alms; depending upon charity. Not uſed.

It is little better than an abſurdity, that the cauſe ſhould be an eleemoſynary for its ſubſiſtence to its effects, as a nature poſterior to and dependent on itſelf. Glanville's Sceptis.

2. Given in charity. This is the preſent uſe.

E'LEGANCE. }
E'LEGANCY. } n. ſ. [elegantia, Lat.]

1. Beauty rather ſoothing than ſtriking; beauty without grandeur; the beauty of propriety not of greatneſs.

St. Auguſtine, out of a kind of elegancy in writing, makes ſome difference. Raleigh's Hiſt.

Theſe queſtions have more propriety, and elegancy, underſtood of the old world. Burnet.

2. Any thing that pleaſes by its nicety. In this ſenſe it has a plural

My compoſitions in gardening are altogether Pindarick, and run into the beautiful wildneſs of nature, without the nice elegancies of art. Spect.

E'LEGANT. adj. [elegans, Lat.]

1. Pleaſing by minuter beauties.

Trifles themſelves are elegant in him. Pope.

There may'ſt thou find ſome elegant retreat. London.

2. Nice, not coarſe; not groſs.

Polite with candour, elegant with eaſe. Pope.

E'LEGANTLY. adv. [from elegant.]

1. In ſuch a manner as to pleaſe.

Now read with them thoſe organic arts which enable men to diſcourſe and write perſpicuouſly, elegantly, and according to the fitteſt ſtyle of lofty, mean, or lowly. Milton.

In a poem elegantly writ,
I will not quarrel with a ſlight miſtake. Roſcom

2. Neatly; nicely; with minute beauty; with pleaſing propriety.

They deſcribe her in part finely and elegantly, and in part gravely and ſententiouſly. Bacon.

Whoever would write elegantly, muſt have regard to the different turn and juncture of every period: there muſt be proper diſtances and pauſes. Pope's Odyſſey, Notes.

ELEGI'ACK. adj. [elegiacus, Lat.]

1. Uſed in Elegies.

2. Pertaining to elegies.

3. Mournful; ſorrowful.

Let elegiac lay the woe relate,
Soft as the breath of diſtant flutes. Gay's Trivia.

E'LEGY. n. ſ. [elegus, Lat.]

1. A mournful ſong.

He hangs odes upon hawthorns, and elegies upon brambles, all forſooth deifying the name of Roſalind. Shakeſp.

2. A funeral ſong.

So on Meander's banks, when death is nigh,
The mournful ſwan ſings her own elegy. Dryden.

3. A ſhort poem without points or affected elegancies.

E'LEMENT. n. ſ. [elementum, Lat.]

1. The firſt or conſtituent principle of any thing.

If nature ſhould intermit her courſe, thoſe principal and mother elements of the world, whereof all things in this lower world are made, ſhould loſe the qualities which now they have. Hooker.

A man may rationally retain doubts concerning the number of thoſe ingredients of bodies, which ſome call elements, and others principles. Boyle.

Simple ſubſtances are either ſpirits, which have no manner of compoſition, or the firſt principles of bodies uſually called elements, of which other bodies are compounded. Watts.

2. The four elements, uſually ſo called, are earth, fire, air, water, of which our world is compoſed. When it is uſed alone, element commonly means the air.

The king is but a man: the violet ſmells to him as it doth to me; and the element ſhews to him as it doth to me. Shakeſp.

My deareſt ſiſter, fare thee well;
The elements be kind to thee, and make
Thy ſpirits all of comfort. Shakeſp. Ant. and Cleop.

The king,
Contending with the fretful elements,
Bid the wind blow the earth into the ſea,
Or ſwell the curled waters. Shakeſp. King Lear.

The heavens and the earth ſhall paſs away, and the elements melt with fervent heat. Peter.

Here be four of you able to make a good world; for you are as differing as the four elements. Bacon.

He from his flaming ſhip his children ſent,
To perith in a milder element. Waller.

3. The proper habitation or ſphere of any thing: as water of fiſh.

We are ſimple men; we do not know the works by charms, by ſpells, and ſuch daubry as is beyond our element. Shakeſp.

Our torments may, in length of time,
Become our elements. Milton.

They ſhew that they are out of their element, and that logick is none of their talent. Baker on Learning.

4. An ingredient; a conſtituent part.

Who ſet the body and the limbs
Of this great ſport together, as you gueſs?
—— One ſure that promiſes no element
In ſuch a buſineſs. Shakeſp. Henry VIII.

5. The letters of any language.

6. The loweſt or firſt rudiments of literature or ſcience.

With religion it fareth as with other ſciences; the firſt delivery of the elements thereof muſt, for like conſideration, be framed according to the weak and tender capacity of young beginners. Hooker.

Every pariſh ſhould keep a petty ſchoolmaſter, which ſhould bring up children in the firſt elements of letters. Spenſer.

We, when we were children, were in bondage under the elements of the world. Gal. iv. 3.

There is nothing more pernicious to a youth, in the elements of painting, than an ignorant maſter. Dryden.

To E'LEMENT. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To compound of elements.

Whether any one ſuch body be met with, in thoſe ſaid to be elemented bodies, I now queſtion. Boyle.

2. To conſtitute; to make as a firſt principle.

Dull sublunary lover's love,
Whose soul is sense, cannot admit
Of absence, cause it doth remove
The thing which elemented it. Donne.

ELEME'NTAL. adj. [from element.]

1. Produced by some of the four elements.

If dusky spots are vary'd on his brow,
And streak'd with red, a troubl'd colour show;
That sullen mixture shall at once declare
Winds, rain, and storms, and elementary war.
Dryden's Virgil.

Soft yielding minds to water glide away,
And sip with nymphs, their elemental tea. Pope.

2. Arising from first principles.

Leeches are by some accounted poison, not properly, that is by temperamental contrariety, occult form, or so much as elemental repugnancy; but inwardly taken, they fasten upon the veins, and occasion an effusion of blood. Brown.

ELEMENTA'RITY. n. s. [from elementary.] Containing rudiments or first principles; the simplicity of nature, or absence of composition; being uncompounded.

A very large class of creatures in the earth, far above the condition of elementarity. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

ELEME'NTARY, adj. [from element.]

1. Uncompounded; having only one principle or constituent part.

All rain water contains in it a copious sediment of terrestrial matter, and is not a simple elementary water. Ray.

The elementary salts of animals are not the same as they appear by distillation. Arbuth. on Aliments.

2. Initial; rude.

ELE'MI. n. s.

This drug is improperly called gum elemi, being a resin. The genuine elemi is brought from Æthiopia in flattish masses, or in cylinders, of a yellowish colour. It is very rare in Europe, and supposed to be produced by a tree of the olive kind. The spurious or American elemi, almost the only kind known, is of a whitish colour, with a greater or less greenish or yellowish tinge. It proceeds from a tall tree, which the Brasilians wound, and collect the resin. Hill's Mat. Med.

ELE'NCH. n. s. [elenchus, Lat.] An argument; a sophism.

The first delusion Satan put into Eve, and his whole tentation might be the same elench continued, as when he said, Ye shall not die, that was, in his equivocation, you shall not incur present death. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

Discover the fallacies of our common adversary, that old sophister, who puts the most abusive elenchs on us. Dec. of P.

ELE'OTS n. s. Some name the apples in request in the cyder countries so; not known by that name in several parts of England. Mortimer's Husbandry.

E'LEPHANT. n. s. [elephas, Lat.]

1. The largest of all quadrupeds, of whose sagacity, faithfulness, prudence, and even understanding, many surprising relations are given. This animal feeds on hay, herbs, and all sorts of pulse; and is said to be extremely long lived. He is supplied with a trunk, or long hollow cartilage, which hangs between his teeth, and serves him for hands. His teeth are the ivory. Calmet.

He loves to hear,
That unicorns may be betray'd with trees,
And bears with glasses, elephants with holes.
Shakespeare.

The elephant hath joints, but not for courtesy;
His legs are for necessity, not flexure. Shakesp.

2. Ivory; the teeth of elephants.

High o'er the gate, in elephant and gold,
The crowd shall Cæsar's Indian war behold.
Dryden's Virg.

ELEPHANTI'ASIS. n. s. [elephantiasis, Lat.] A species of leprosy, so called from covering the skin with incrustations like those on the hide of an elephant.

ELEPHA'NTINE. adj. [elephantinus, Lat.] Pertaining to the elephant.

To E'LEVATE. v. a. [elevo, Latin.]

1. To raise up aloft.

This subterraneous heat or fire, which elevates the water out of the abyss. Woodward.

2. To exalt; to dignify.

3. To raise with great conceptions.

Others apart sat on a hill retir'd,
In thoughts more elevate, and reason'd high
Of providence, foreknowledge, will, and fate. Milt.

In all that great extent, wherein the mind wanders, in those remote speculations it may seem to be elevated with, it stirs not beyond sense or reflection. Locke.

Now rising fortune elevates his mind;
He shines unclouded, and adorns mankind. Savage.

4. To elate with vicious pride.

To mischief swift, hope elevates, and joy
Brightens his crest. Milton.

5. To lessen by detraction. This sense, though legitimately deduced from the Latin, is not now in use.

When the judgments of learned men are alledged against you, what do they but either elevate their credit, or oppose unto them the judgments of others as learned? Hooker.

E'LEVATE. part. adj. [from elevated.] Exalted; raised aloft.

On each side an imperial city stood,
With tow'rs and temples proudly elevate
On seven small hills. Milton.

ELEVA'TION. n. s. [elevatio, Latin.]

1. The act of raising aloft.

The disruption of the strata, the elevation of some, and depression of others, did not fall out by chance, but were directed by a discerning principle. Woodward.

2. Exaltation; dignity.

Angels, in their several degrees of elevation above us, may be endowed with more comprehensive faculties. Locke.

3. Exaltations of the mind by noble conceptions.

We are therefore to love him with all possible application and elevation of spirit, with all the heart, soul and mind. Norris.

4. Exaltation of style.

His style was an elegant perspicuity, rich of phrase, but seldom any bold metaphors, and so far from tumid, that it rather wanted a little elevation. Watton.

5. Attention to objects above us.

All which different elevations of spirit unto God, are contained in the name of prayer. Hooker.

6. The height of any heavenly body with respect to the horizon.

Some latitudes have no circular days, as those which have more than seventy-three degrees of northern elevation, as Nova Zambla. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

ELEVA'TOR. n. s. [from elevate.] A raiser, or lifter up, applied to some chirurgical instruments put to such uses. Quincy.

ELE'VEN. [adj. endlepen, Saxon.] Ten and one; one more than ten.

Had I a dozen sons, and none less dear than Marcius, I had rather eleven die nobly for their country, than one voluptuously surfeit out of action. Shakspeare.

ELE'VENTH, adj. [from eleven.] The next in order to the tenth.

In the eleventh chapter he returns to speak of the building of Babel. Raleigh's History.

ELF. n. s. plural elves. [elf, Welsh. Baxter's Gloss.]

1. A wandering spirit, supposed to be seen in wild unfrequented places; a fairy.

Through this house give glimmering light,
By the dead and drowsy fire;
Every elf and fairy sprite,
Hop as light as bird from briar. Shakesp.

Fairy elves,
Whose midnight revels by some forest side,
Or fountain, some belated peasant sees,
Or dreams he sees. Milton.

The king of elfs and little fairy queen
Gambol'd on heaths, and danc'd on every green.
Dryden.

If e'er one vision touch'd thy infant thought,
Of all the nurse and all the priests have taught;
Of airy elves by moon-light shadow seen,
The silver token, and the circled green. Pope.

2. A devil.

That we may angels seem, we paint them elves;
And are but satires to set up ourselves. Dryden.

However it was civil, an angel or elf:
For he ne'er could have hit'd it so well of himself.
Swift.

To ELF. v. a. [from the noun.] To entangle hair in so intricate a manner, that it is not to be unravelled. This the vulgar have supposed to be the work of fairies in the night; and all hair so matted together, hath had the name of elf-locks. Hanmer.

My face I'll grime with filth,
Blanket my loins, elf all my hair in knots. Shakesp.

E'LFIN. adj. [from elf.] Relating to fairies; elfish; belonging to elves.

Now when that idle dream was to him brought,
Unto that elfin knight he bade him fly,
Where he slept soundly. Spenser.

E'LFLOCK. n. s. [elf and lock.] Knots of hair twisted by elves.

This is that very Mab,
That plats the manes of horses in the night,
And bakes the elf-locks in foul sluttish hairs,
Which, once entangl'd, much misfortune bodes.
Shakesp.

To ELI'CITE. v. a. [elicio, Latin.] To strike out; to fetch out by labour or art.

Although the same truths may be elicited, and explicated by the contemplation of animals, yet they are more clearly evidenced in the contemplation of man. Hale's Origin of Mank.

He elicits those acts out of the meer lapsed state of human nature. Cheyne.

ELI'CIT. adj. [elicitus, Latin.] Brought into act; brought from possibility to real existence.

It is the virtue of humility and obedience; and not the formal elicit act of meekness; meekness being ordinarily annexed to these virtues. Hamm.

The schools dispute whether, in morals, the external action superadds any thing of good or evil to the internal elicit act of the will. South.

ELICITA'TION n. s. [from elicio, Latin.] That elicitation which the schools intend, is a deducing of the power of the will into act: that drawing which they mention, is merely from the apprehensibility of the object. Bramhall.

To ELI'DE. v. a. [elido, Latin.] To break in pieces; to crush.

We are to cut off that whereunto they, from whom these objections proceed, fly for defence, when the force and strength of the argument is elided. Hook r.

ELIGIBILITY. n. s. [from eligible.] Worthiness to be chosen.

The business of the will is not to judge concerning the nature of things, but to choose them in consequence of the report made by the understanding, as to their eligibility or goodness. Fidd s's Serm.

E'LIGIBLE. adj. [eligibilis, Latin.] Fit to be chosen; worthy of choice; preferable.

A British ministry ought to be satisfied, if, allowing to every particular man that his private scheme ſcheme is wiſeſt, they can perſuade him, that next to his own plan, that of the government is the moſt eligible. Addiſon's Freeholder.

Did they really think, that going on with the war was more eligible for their country than the leaſt abatement of thoſe conditions? Swift.

That the moſt plain, ſhort, and lawful way to any good end, is more eligible than one directly contrary in ſome or all of theſe qualities. Swift.

Certainty, in a deep diſtreſs, is more eligible than ſuſpenſe. Clariſſa.

E'LIGIBLENESS. n. ſ. [from eligible.] Worthineſs to be choſen; preferableneſs.

1. The act of cutting off; as, can't th' attempt, there is an eliſion of a ſyllable.

You will obſerve the abbreviations and eliſions, by which conſonants of moſt obdurate ſounds are joined together, without any ſoftening vowel to intervene. Swift.

2. Diviſion; ſeparation of parts.

The cauſe given of ſound, that it would be an eliſion of the air, whereby, if they mean any thing, they mean a cutting or dividing, or elſe an attenuating of the air, is but a term of ignorance. Bacon's Natural Hiſtory.

FLIXA'TION. n. ſ. [elixus, Latin.] The act of boiling or ſtewing any thing.

Even to ourſelves, and more perfect animals, water performs no ſubſtantial nutrition; ſerving for refrigeration, dilution of ſolid aliments, and its elixation in the ſtomach Brown.

ELI'XIR. n. ſ. [Arabick.]

1. A medicine made by ſtrong infuſion, where the ingredients are almoſt diſſolved in the menſtruum, and give it a thicker conſiſtence than a tincture. Quincy.

For when no healing art prevail'd,
When cordials and elixirs fail'd,
On your pale cheek he ſtopp'd the flow'r,
Reviv'd you like a dying flow'r. Waller.

2. The liquour, or whatever it be, with which chymiſts hope to tranſmute metals to gold.

No chymiſt yet the elixir got,
But glorious his pregnant pot,
If by the way to him befal
Some odoriferous thing, or medicinal Donne.

3. The extract or quinteſſence of any thing.

In the ſoul, when the ſupreme faculties move regularly, the inferiour paſſions and affections following, there ariſes a ſerenity infinitely beyond the higheſt quinteſſence and elixir of worldly delight. South.

4. Any cordial; or invigorating ſubſtance.

What wonder then, if fields and regions here
Breathe forth elixir pure! Milton's Par. Loſt.

ELK. n. ſ. [elc, Saxon.]

The elk is a large and ſtately animal of the ſtag kind. The neck is ſhort and ſlender; the ears nine inches in length, and four in breadth. The colour of its coat in Winter is greyiſh, in Summer it is paler. The horns of the male elk are ſhort and thick near the head, where they by degrees expand into a great breadth, with ſeveral prominences in its edges. Hill.

And, ſcarce his head
Rais'd o'er the heapy wreath, the branching elk
Lies ſlumb'ring ſilent in the white abyſs Thomſon.

ELL. n. ſ. [eln, Saxon.]

1. A meaſure containing forty-five inches, or a yard and a quarter.

They are ſaid to make yearly forty thouſand pieces of linen cloth, reckoning two hundred ell to the piece. Addiſon.

2. It is taken proverbially for a long meaſure.

Acquit thee bravely, play the man;
Look not on pleaſures as they come, but go:
Defer not the laſt virtue; life's poor ſpan
Makes not an ell by trifling in thy woe. Herbert.

ELLI'PSIS. n. ſ. [ἔλλειψις.]

1. A figure of rhetorick, by which ſomething is left out neceſſary to be ſupplied by the hearer: as, the thing I love, for the thing which I love.

The words are delivered by way of elliptis, Rom. iv. 18. Hammond.

2. [In geometry.] An oval figure, being generated from the ſection of a cone, by a plane cutting both ſides of the cone, but not parallel to the baſe, which produces a circle, and meeting with the baſe when produced. Harris.

On the cylinder inclined, deſcribe an elliptis parallel to the horizon. Wilkins's Dædalus.

The planets could not poſſibly acquire ſuch revolutions in circular orbs, or in elliptis very little eccentrick. Bentley.

ELLI'PTICAL. } adj. [from elliptis.] Having the form of an ellipſis; oval.
ELLI'PTICK. }

Since the planets move in elliptick orbits, in one of whoſe foci the ſun is, and by a radius from the ſun deſcribe equal areas in equal times, which no other law of a circulating fluid, but the harmonical circulation, can account for; we muſt find out a law for the paracentrical motion, that may make the orbits elliptick. Cheyne's Phil. Prin.

In animals, that gather food from the ground, the pupil is oval or elliptical; the greateſt diameter going tranſverſely from ſide to ſide. Cheyne's Phil. Prin.

ELM. n. ſ. [ulmus, Latin; elm, Saxon.]

1. The name of a tree. The ſpecies are, the common rough-leaved elm; the witch hazel, or broad-leaved elm, by ſome called the Britiſh elm; the ſmooth-leaved or witch elm. Neither of them were originally natives of this country; but they have propagated themſelves by ſeeds and ſuckers in ſuch plenty as hardly to be rooted out; eſpecially in hedgerows, where there is harbour for their roots. They are very proper to place in hedgerows upon the borders of the fields, where they will thrive better than when planted in a wood or cloſe plantation, and their ſhade will not be very injurious to whatever grows under them, for they may be trained up in form of an hedge, keeping them cut every year, to the height of forty or fifty feet: but they ſhould not be planted too near fruit trees; becauſe the roots of the elm will intermix with the roots of other trees, and deprive them of nouriſhment. Miller.

The rural ſeats,
Whoſe lofty elms and venerable oaks,
Invite the rook, who high amid the boughs,
In early Spring, his airy city builds Thomſon.

2. It was uſed to ſupport vines, to which the poets allude.

Thou art an elm, my huſband; I a vine,
Whoſe weakneſs married to thy ſtronger ſtate,
Makes me with thy ſtrength to communicate. Shakeſpeare.

ELOCU'TION. n. ſ. [elocutio, Latin.]

1. The power of fluent ſpeech.

A travelled doctor of phyſick, of bold, and of able elocution. Wotton.

2. Power of ſpeaking; ſpeech.

Whoſe taſte, too long forborne, at firſt eſſay
Gave elocution to the mute, and taught
The tongue not made for ſpeech to ſpeak thy praiſe. Milton.

3. The power of expreſſion or diction; eloquence; beauty of words.

The third happineſs of his poet's imagination is elocution, or the art of cloathing or adorning that thought ſo found, and varied, in apt, ſignificant, and ſounding words. Dryden.

As I have endeavoured to adorn it with noble thoughts, ſo much more to expreſs thoſe thoughts with elocution. Dryden.

E'LOGY. n. ſ. [eloge, French.] Praiſe; panegyrick.

Buckingham lay under millions of maledictions, which at the prince's arrival did vaniſh into praiſes and elogies. Wotton.

If I durſt ſay all I know of the elogies received concerning him, I ſhould offend the modeſty of our author. Boyle.

Some excellent perſons, above my approbation or elogy, have conſidered this ſubject. Holder's Elements of Speech.

To E'LOIGNE. v. a. [eloigner, French.] To put at a diſtance; to remove one far from another. Now diſuſed.

From worldly care himſelf he did eloin,
And greatly ſhunned manly exerciſe. Fairy Queen.

I'll ſell thee now, dear love! what thou ſhalt do
To anger deſtiny, as ſhe doth us;
How I ſhall ſtay though ſhe eloigne me thus,
And how poſterity ſhall know it too. Donne.

To E'LONGATE. v. a. [from longus, Latin.]

1. To lengthen; to draw out; to protract; to ſtretch.

2. To put further off.

The firſt ſtar of Aries, in the time of Meton the Athenian, was placed in the very interſection, which is now elongated and moved eaſtward twenty-eight degrees. Brown.

To ELO'NGATE. v. n. To go off to a diſtance from any thing.

About Cape Frio in Braſilia, the South point of the compaſs varieth twelve degrees unto the Weſt; but elongating from the coaſt of Braſilia, towards the ſhore of Africa, it varieth eaſtward. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

ELONGA'TION. n. ſ. [from elongate.]

1. The act of ſtretching or lengthening itſelf.

To this motion of elongation of the fibres in ewing the union or conglutination of the parts of the body, when they are ſeparated by a wound. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

2. The ſtate of being ſtretched.

3. [In medicine.] An imperfect luxation, when the ligament of any joint is ſo extended or relaxed as to lengthen the limb, but yet not let the bone go quite out of its place. Quincy.

Elongations are the effect of an humour ſoaking upon a ligament, thereby making it liable to be ſtretched, and to be thruſt quite out upon every little force Wiſeman's Surgery.

4. Diſtance; ſpace at which one thing is diſtant from another.

The diſtant points in the celeſtial expanſe appear to the eye in ſo ſmall a degree of elongation from another, as bears no proportion to what is real. Glanville's Scepſis.

5. Departure; removal.

Nor then had it been placed in a middle point, but that of deſcent, or elongation. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

To ELO'PE. v. a. [loopen, to run, Dutch.] To run away; to break looſe; to eſcape from law or reſtraint.

It is neceſſary to treat women as members of the body politick, ſince great numbers of them have eloped from their allegiance. Addiſon's Freeholder.

What from the dame can Paris hope?
She may as well from him elope. Prior.

The fool whoſe wife elopes ſome thrice a quarter,
For matrimonial ſolace dies a martyr. Pope.

ELO'PEMENT. n. ſ. [from elope.] Departure from juſt reſtraint; rejection of lawful power: commonly uſed of a wife.

An elopement is the voluntary departure of a wife from her huſband to live with an adulterer, and with whom ſhe lives in breach of the matrimonial vow. Ayliffe's Parergon.

The negligent huſband, truſting to the efficacy of his principle, was undone by his wife's elopement from him. Arbuthnot

ELOPS. n. ſ. [Lat.] A fiſh; reckoned however by Milton among the ſerpents.

Scorpion and aſp, and amphiſbena dire
Ceraſtes horn'd, hydrus, and elops drear,
And dipſas. Milton. Par. L. ii

E'LOQUENCE. n. ſ. [eloquentia, Latin.]

1. The power of ſpeaking with fluency and elegance, oratory.

Action is eloquence, and the eyes of the ignorant
More learned than the ears. Shakeſp. Coriolanus.

Athens or free Rome, where eloquence
Flouriſh'd, ſince mute. Milton.

His manly ſoul myſterious pleaſures found,
And ſpeaks with all the eloquence of wounds Heigh.

2. Elegant language uttered with fluency.

Say ſhe be mute, and will not ſpeak a word;
Then I'll commend her volubility,
And ſay ſhe uttered piercing eloquence. Shakſp.

Fit words attended on his weighty ſenſe,
And mild perſuaſion flow'd in eloquence. Pope's Od.

E'LOQUENT. adj. [eloquens, Latin.] Having the power of oratory; having the power of fluent and elegant ſpeech.

The Lord of hoſts doth take away the captain of fifty, and the honourable man, and the counſellor, and the cunning artificer, and the eloquent orator. Iſaiah iii. 3.

O death! all eloquent, you only prove
What duſt we dote on, when 'tis man we love. Pope

ELSE. pronoun. [ellep, Saxon.] Other; one beſides: it is applied both to perſons and things.

To ſtand ſtained with travel, and ſweating with deſire to ſee him; thinking of nothing elſe, putting all affairs elſe in oblivion, as if there were nothing elſe to be done but to ſee him. Shakeſp. Henry IV

Should he or any elſe ſearch, he will find evidence of the Divine Wiſdom. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

He ſays, 'twas then with him, as now with you; He did it when he had nothing elſe to do. Dryden.

ELSE. adv.

1. Otherwiſe.

Dare not, on thy life,
Touch ought of mine beſide, by lot my due,
But ſtand aloof, and think profane to view:
This faulchion, elſe, not hitherto withſtood,
Theſe hoſtile fields ſhall fatten with thy blood.
Dryden.

What ways are there whereby we ſhould be aſſured, but either by an internal impreſſion of the notion of a God upon our minds, or elſe by ſuch external and viſible effects as our reaſon tells us muſt be attributed to ſome cauſe? Tillotſon

2. Beſide; except that mentioned.

Pleaſures which no where elſe were to be found,
And all Elyſium in a ſpot of ground. Dryden.

3. It has ſometimes or before it ſuperfluouſly.

There are here divers trees, which are not to be found elſewhere. Abbot's Deſcrip. of the World

As he proved that Pilon was not Ganges, or Gehon, Nilus; ſo where to find them elſewhere he knew not. Raleigh's Hiſt.

For, if we chance to fix our thoughts elſewhere,
Though our eyes open be, we cannot ſee. Davies.

Henceforth oracles are ceas'd,
And thou no more with pomp and ſacrifice
Shalt be inquir'd at Delphos, or elſewhere. Milton.

Although ſeaſoned bodies may and do live near as long in London as elſewhere, yet new-comers and children do not. Graunt's Bills of Mortality.

2. In other places; in ſome other place.

They which elſewhere complain, that injury is offered to the meaneſt miniſter, when the magiſtrate appointeth him what to wear, think the graveſt prelates no competent judges where it is fit for the miniſter to ſtand. Hooker.

Let us no more contend, nor blame
Each other, blam'd enough elſewhere. Milton.

Bellow, baſe man, thy idle threats elſewhere,
My mother's daughter knows not how to fear Dryd

If it contradicts what he ſays elſewhere, it is no new or ſtrange thing. Tillotſon.

To ELU'CIDATE. v. a. [elucido, Latin.] To explain; to clear; to make plain.

To elucidate a little the matter, let us conſider it Boyle.

Embalm me,
Then lay me forth; although unqueen'd, yet like
A queen, and daughter to a king, inter me
Shakespeare.

I would shew future times
What you were, and teach them change towards such
Verse embalms virtue, and tombs or thrones of rhymes,
Preserve frail transitory fame as much
As spice doth bodies from corruption's touch.
Donne.

Muse; at that name thy sacred sorrows shed;
Those tears eternal that embalm the dead. Pope.

EMBA'LMER. n. s. [from embalm.] One that practises the art of embalming and preserving bodies.

The Romans were not so good embalmers as the Egyptians, so the body was utterly consumed.
Bacon's Natural History.

To EMBA'R. v. a. [from bar.]

1. To shut; to enclose.

Themselves for fear into his jaws to fall,
He forc'd to castle strong to take their flight;
Where fast embar'd in mighty brazen wall,
He has them now four years besieg'd to make them thrall. Spenser.

In form of airy members fair embar'd
His spirits pure were subject to our sight Fairfax.

2. To stop; to hinder by prohibition; to block up.

Translating the mart unto Calais, he embared all further trade for the future. Bacon's Henry VII.

If this commerce 'twixt heaven and earth were not Embar'd, and all this traffick quite forgot,
She, for whose loss we have lamented thus,
Would work more fully and pow'rfully on us. Donne.

EMBARKA'TION. n. s. [from embark.]

1. The act of putting on shipboard.

The French gentlemen were very solicitous for the embarcation of the army, and for the departure of the fleet. Clarendon.

2. The act of going on shipboard.

EMBA'RGO. n. s. [embargar, Spanish.] A prohibition to pass; in commerce, a stop put to trade.

He knew that the subjects of Flanders drew so great commodity from the trade of England, as by embargo they would soon wax weary of Perkin.
Bacon's Henry VII.

After an embargo of our trading ships in the river of Bourdeaux, and other points of sovereign affront, there did succeed the action of Rhee. Wotton.

I was not much concerned, in my own particular, for the embargo which was laid upon it Dryd.

To EMBA'RK. v. a. [embarquer, French.]

1. To put on shipboard.

Of mankind, to numerous late,
All left, in one small bottom swam imbark'd.
Milton.

To EMBA'SE. v. a. [from base.]

1. To vitiate; to depauperate; to lower; to deprave; to impair.

Grains are annual, so that the virtue of the seed is not worn out; whereas in a tree it is emlased by the ground. Bacon.

I have no service of ignoble end in any present labour, which may, on either side, refrain or embase the freedom of my poor judgment. Watts.

I will rather chuse to wear a crown of thorns, than to exchange that of gold for one of lead, whose embased flexibleness shall be forced to bend
King Charles.

A pleasure high, rational, and angelical; a pleasure embased with no appendant sting; but such a one as being honey in the mouth, never turns to gall or gravel in the belly. South.

2. To degrade; to vilify.

Joy of my life, full oft for loving you
I bless my lot, that was so lucky plac'd:
But then the more your own mishap I rue,
That are so much by so mean love embas'd. Spenser.

EMBA'SSADOR. n. s. [See AMBASSADOUR.] One sent on a publick message.

Mighty Jove's embassador appear'd
With the same message. Denham.

Myself, the king's embassador, will go. Dryden.

EMBA'SSADRESS. n. s. A woman sent on a publick message.

With fear the modest matron lifts her eyes,
And to the bright embassadress replies.
Garth's Ovid.

EMBASSAGE. } n. s. [It may be observed,
EMBASSY. } that though our authours write almost indiscriminately embassador, or ambassador, embassage or ambassage; yet there is scarcely an example of ambassy, all concurring to write embassy.]

1. A publick message; a message concerning business between princes or states.

Fresh embassy and suit,
Nor from the state nor private friends, hereafter,
Will I hear out to. Shakesp. Coriolanus.

When he was at Newcastle he sent a solemn embassage unto James king of Scotland, to treat and conclude a peace with him. Bacon's Henry VII.

The peers polluted thus, a chosen band,
He first commissions to the Latian land,
In three returning embassy. Dryden's Æn.

2. Any solemn message.

He sends the angels on embassies with his decrees,
Taylor.

3. An errand in an ironical sense.

A bird was made fly with such art to carry a written embassage among the ladies, that one might say, It a live bird, how taught? If dead, how made? Sidney.

Nimble mischance, that art so light of foot,
Doth not thy embassage belong to me;
And am I last that know it? Shakesp. Rich. II.

To EMBA'TTLE. v. a. [from battle.] To range in order or array of battle.

The English are embattled;
To horse! you gallant princes, straight to horse! Shak.

I could drive her from the ward of her reputation, her marriage-vow, and a thousand other her defences, which now are too strongly embattled against me Shakesp.

On their embattl'd ranks the waves return,
And overwhelm the war! Milton's Par. Lost.

Embattl'd nations strive in vain
The hero's glory to restrain.
Streams arm'd with rocks, and mountains red with fire,
In vain against his force conspire Prior.

To EMBA'TTLE. v. n. To be ranged in battle array.

The night
Is shiny, and they say we shall embattle
By the second hour of the morn. Shakespeare.

To EMBA'Y. v. a. [from baigner, to bathe, French.]

1. To bathe; to wet; to wash. Not used.

In her lap a little babe did play
His cruel sport,
For in her tine more blood he did embay
His little hands, and tender joints embrew. Fairy Q.

Every verse the human sweet embay'd,
And, slumb'ring soft, my heart and soul away.
Fairy Queen.

2. [From bay.] To inclose in a bay; to land lock.

If that the Turkish fleet
Be not shelter'd and embay'd, they're drown'd.
Shakesp.

To EMBELLISH. v. a. [embellir, French.] To dorn; to beautify; to grace with ornaments; to decorate.

How much more beauteous had the fountain been,
Embellish'd with her first created queen;
Where crystal streams through living turf had run,
Contented with an urn of native stone. Dryd. Juv.

The names of the figures that embellished the discourses discourses of those that understood the art of speaking, are not the art and skill of speaking well. Locke.

That which was once the most beautiful spot of Italy, covered with palaces, embellished by emperors, and celebrated by poets, has now nothing to shew but ruins. Addison on Italy.

EMBE'LLISHMENT. n. s. [from embellish.] Ornament; adventitious beauty: decoration; adscititious grace, any thing that confers the power of pleasing.

Cultivate the wild licentious wave
With wisdom, discipline, and liberal arts,
The embellishments of life. Addison's Cato.

Apparitions, visions, and intercourse of all kinds between the dead and the living, are the frequent and familiar embellishments of the legends of the Romish church. Atterbury.

E'MBERING. n. s. The ember days. A word used by old authours, now obsolete.

For causes good so many ways,
Keep emb'rings well, and fasting days;
What law commands, we ought to obey,
For Friday, Saturn, and Wednesday. Tusser.

E'MBERS. n. s. without a singular [æmyrta, Saxon, ashes; eimyria, Islandick, hot ashes or cinders.] Hot cinders; ashes not yet extinguished.

Take hot embers, and put them about a bottle filled with new beer, almost to the very neck: let the bottle be well stopped, lest it fly out; and continue it, renewing the embers every day for the space of ten days. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

If the air will not permit,
Some still removed place will fit,
While glowing embers through the room
Teach light to counterfeit a gloom. Milton.

While thus heaven's highest counsels, by the low
Footsteps of their effects, he trac'd too well,
He tos'd his troubl'd eyes, embers that glow
Now with new rage, and wax too hot for hell.
Crashaw.

He said, and rose, as holy zeal inspires;
He rakes hot embers, and renews the fires.
Dryden's Virgil.

E'MBERWELK. n. s. [The original of this word has been much controverted: some derive it from embers or ashes strewed by penitents on their heads; but Nelson decides it in favour of Mareschal, who derives it from ymbren or embren, a course or circumlocution.] A week in which an ember day falls.

The ember days at the four seasons are the Wednesday, Friday, and Saturday after the first Sunday in Lent, the feast of Pentecost, September 14, December 13. Common Prayer.

Stated times appointed for fasting are Lent, and the four seasons of the year called emberweeks.
Ayliffe's Parergon.

To EMBEZZLE. v. a. [This word seems corrupted by an ignorant pronunciation from imbecil.]

1. To appropriate by breach of trust; to turn what is intrusted in his hands to his own use.

He had embezzled the king's treasure, and extorted money by way of loan from all men. Hayw.

2. To waste; to swallow up in riot.

When thou hast embezzled all thy store,

A knight her met, in mighty arms emboss'd.
Fairy Queen.

4. [emboscare, Italian.] To inclose in a thicket.

Like that self-begotten bird
In th' Arabian wood embost. Milton's Agonistes.

5. To hunt hard.

When a deer is hard run, and foams at the mouth, he is said to be embost: a dog also, when he is strained with hard running, especially upon hard ground, will have his knees swelled, and then he is said to be embost, from bosse, French, a tumour.
Hanmer.

Oh, he is more mad
Than Telamon for his shield; the boar of Thessaly
Was never so emboss. Shakespeare.

We have almost embost him: you shall see his fall to-night. Shakespeare.

EMBO'SSMENT. n. s. [from emboss.]

1. Any thing standing out from the rest; jut; eminence.

I wish also, in the very middle, a fair mount, with three ascents and alleys, enough for four to walk a-breast; which I would have to be perfect circles, without any bulwarks or embossments.
Bacon's Essays.

2. Relief; rising work.

They are at a loss about the word pendents; some fancy it expresses only the great embossment of the figure, others believe it hung off the helmet in alto relievo Addison on Italy.

To EMBO'TTLE. v. a. [bouteille, French.] To include in bottles; to bottle.

Storm, hrmest fruit
Imbottled, long as Phrygian Troy
Withstood the Greeks' endmes Philips.

To EMBO'WEL. v. a. [from bowel.] To eviscerate; to deprive of the entrails; to exentrate.

The schools,
Embowelled of their doctrine, have left off
The danger to itself. Shakespeare.

Embowelled will I see thee by and by;
Till then, in blood, by noble Percy lye.
Shakesp. Henry IV.

The

The roar
Embowell'd with outrageous noise the air,
And all her entrails tore. Milton's Par. Loſt.
Foſſils and minerals that th' embowell'd ear h
Diſplays. Philips.

EMBRA'CER. n. ſ. [from the verb.]

1. Claſp; fond preſſure in the arms; hug.
Thames, the moſt lov'd of all the ocean's ſons
By his old line, to his embraces runs. Denham.

2. An hoſtile ſqueeze; cruſh.

EMBRA'CEMENT. n. ſ. [from embrace.]

1. Claſp in the arms; hug; embrace.
Thus death becomes a rival to us all,
And hopes with foul embracements to her get,
In whoſe decay virtue's fair ſhrine muſt fall. Sidney.
There cheriſhing one another with deal, though chaſte embracements, with ſweet, though cold kiſſes, it might ſeem that Love was come to play him there without darts. Sidney.

2. Hoſtile hug; grapple.
Theſe beaſts, fighting with any man, ſtand upon their hinder feet, and ſo this did, being ready to give me a ſhrewd embracement Sidney.

3. Comprehenſion.
Nor can her wide embracements filled be. Davies.

4. State of being contained; incloſure.
The parts in man's body eaſily reparable, as ſpirits, blood, and fleſh, die in the embracements of the parts hardly reparable, as bones, nerves, and membranes. Bacon's Natural Hiſtory.

5. Conjugal endearment.
I would ſheeller rejoice in it at abſence, wherein he won honour, than in the embracements of his bed, where he would ſhew moſt love. Shak. Coriolan.

EMBRA'CER. n. ſ. [from embrace.] The perſon embracing.
Yet are they the greateſt embracers of pleaſure of any other upon earth; and they eſteem of pearls as pebbles, ſo they may ſatisfy their guſt, in point of pleaſure or revenge. Howel.

No less in courage than in singing well;
While, unconcern'd, you let your country know,
They have impoverish'd themselves, not you Waller.

For sense of honour, if it impoverisheth a man, it is, in his esteem, rather honour nor sense. South.

I with roses bring,
To strew my bed, 'till the impoverish'd Spring
Confess her want. Prior.

2. To lessen fertility; as tillage impoverishes land.

EMPO'VERISHER. n. s. [from impoverish.]

1. One that makes others poor.

2. That which impairs fertility.

They destroy the weeds, and fit the land for after-crops, being an improver, and not an impoverisher of land. Mortimer.

EMPO'VERISHMENT. n. s. [from impoverish.] Depauperation; cause of poverty; drain of wealth.

Being paid as it is, now some, and then some, it is no great burden unto her, nor any great impoverishment to her coffers. Spenser's State of Ireland.

All appeals for justice, or appellations for favour or preferment to another country, are so many grievous impoverishments. Swift's View of Ireland.

To EMPO'WER. v. a. [from power.]

1. To authorise; to commission; to give power or authority to any purpose.

You are empowered, when you please, to give the final decision of wit. Dryden's Juv. Dedication.

The government shall be empowered to grant commissions to all Protestants whatsoever. Swift.

2. To give natural force; to enable.

Does not the same power that enables them to heal, empower them to destroy? Bacon on Learning.

E'MPRESS. n. s. [contracted from emperess, which is retained by Johnson in the following lines]

1. The queen of an emperour.

Let your nimble feet
Tread subtile circles, that may always meet
In point to him; and figures to expreſs
The grace of him, and his great empereſs. Ben Jonſon.

2. A female inveſted with imperial dignity; a female ſovereign.

Empreſs of this fair world, reſplendent Eve! Milton.
Yet, London, empreſs of the northern clime,
By an high fate thou greatly didſt expire. Dryden.
Wiſdom, thou ſay'ſt, from heav'n receiv'd her birth;
Her beams tranſmitted to the ſubject earth:
Yet this great empreſs of the human ſoul,
Does only with imagin'd power controul,
If reſtleſs paſſion, by rebellious ſway,
Compels the weak uſurper to obey. Prior.

EMPRI'SE. n. ſ. [empriſe, French.] Attempt of danger; undertaking of hazard; enterpriſe.

Noble minds of yore, allied were
In brave purſuit of chivalrous empriſe. Fairy Queen.
A double conqueſt muſt you make,
If you atchieve renown by this empriſe Fairfax.
Fierce faces threat'ning wars;
Giants of mighty bone, and bold empriſe. Milton.
Thus, 'till the ſun had travell'd half the ſkie,
Ambuſh'd we lie, and wait the bold empriſe. Pope

EMPTIER. n. ſ. [from empty.] One that empties; one that makes any place void by taking away what it contained.

The empiers have emptied them out, and married their vine-branches. Nahum, ii. 2.

EMPTINESS. n. ſ. [from empty.]

1. Abſence of plenitude; inanity.

Where cities ſtood,
Well fenc'd, and numerous, deſolation reigns
And emptineſs; diſmay'd, united, unhors'd,
The widow and the orphan ſtroll. Philips.

2. The ſtate of being empty.

His coffers ſound
With hollow poverty and emptineſs. Shakeſpeare.

3. A void ſpace; vacuity; vacuum.

Not could another in your room have been,
Except an emptineſs had come between. Dryden.
The ordinary air in which we live and reſpire, is of ſo thin a compoſition, that ſixteen thouſand one hundred and forty-nine parts of its dimenſions are mere emptineſs and nothing; and the remaining one only, material and real ſubſtance. Bentley.

4. Want of ſubſtance or ſolidity.

'Tis this which cauſes the graces and the loves to take up their habitations in the hardeſt marble and to ſubſiſt in the emptineſs of light and ſhadow. Dryden's Dufreſnoy, Prep.

5. Unſatisfactorineſs; inability to fill up the deſires.

O frail eſtate of human things,
Now to your coſt your emptineſs we know. Dryden.
Form the judgement about the worth or emptineſs of things here, according as they are or are not of uſe, in relation to what is to come after. Atterbury.

6. Vacuity of head; want of knowledge.

Eternal ſmiles his emptineſs betray,
